

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

59. Apologetical Conclusion ; with a Recapitulation and Addition of a few Particulars respecting the preceding Subjects. - 282

APPENDIX.

No. I. Cursory Remarks on one or two Objections in Mr. Paine's last Pamphlet, against the Au- thenticity of the Gospel.				333
No. II.	-	-	-	357
No. III.	-	-	-	368
No. IV.	-	.	-	370
No. V.	-	-	-	371

CHRIST-

CHRISTIAN PHILOSOPHY:

OR,

AN ATTEMPT TO DISPLAY,

BY INTERNAL TESTIMONY,

THE

EVIDENCE AND EXCELLENCE

OF

REVEALED RELIGION.

CHRISTIAN PHILOSOPHY:

OR,

THE EVIDENCE AND EXCELLENCE

OF

REVEALED RELIGION.

SECTION I.

Cupimus enim investigare quid verum sit; neque id solum, sed quod cum veritate, PIETATEM quoque præterea erga Deum habeat conjunctam.—It is my object to inquire what is true; but not to acquiesce merely in the discovery of speculative truth; but to find out that doctrine which, together with truth, unites PIOUS AFFECTIONS to God. SADOLET.

INTRODUCTORY.

I ENTER on the subject of this volume with unaffected diffidence. I tread on holy ground with awe. Though much of my life, devoted to letters from the earliest age, has been spent in reading the best writers on the Christian doctrine, and more in contemplation of it, yet a sense of its high importance, and of my own fallibility, has long restrained the impulse which prompted me to engage in its public discussion. Nothing but conscious rectitude of intention, co-operating with the hope of obtaining the aid of God's holy Spirit and the reader's indulgence, could animate the tremulous mind in an enterprise to which it feels and avows itself unequal. A conviction that the subject is peculiarly seasonable, has contributed to overcome reluctance. The TIMES indeed appear to me to call upon every professor of Christianity to vindicate, in the manner best adapted to his abilities and opportunities, its controverted truth, and insulted honour; and if I shall be fortunate enough to communicate one suggestion to the wavering mind, which may conduce to this great purpose, my labour will not be in vain, nor my undertaking rashly adventurous. I shall have accomplished my wish. To diffuse the sunshine of religious hope and confidence over the shadowy path of life; to dissipate the gloom of despair; to contribute, in the smallest degree, to the salvation of a fellow-creature; objects so desirable inspire an ardour which enables zeal in a good cause to triumph over timidity.
B subject

That unbelief in Christ is increasing in the present age, and that the spirit of the times is rather favourable to its increase, has been asserted by high authority, and is too notorious to admit denial. The apostasy of a great nation, in the most enlightened and polished part of Europe; the public, unblushing avowal of atheism among some of its leaders; the multiplication of books on the Continent, in which Christianity is treated as a mere mode of fanaticism; all these circumstances have combined, with others, to cause in many persons not only an indifference to the religion of Christ, but contempt and aversion to his very name. It were easy to cite contumelious reproaches of his person, as well as audacious denials of his claim to divine authority. But with such citations I will not pollute my page, which, however it may be deformed by error, shall not be stained with the transfusion of blasphemy. It is to be wished that all such works could be consigned to immediate and everlasting oblivion;

oblivion ; but, I am sorry to say that they are diffused with an industry, which, if it appeared in making proselytes to truth, would be in the highest degree meritorious. Almost every individual in our own country can now read ; and manuals of infidelity, replete with plausible arguments, in language level to the lowest classes, are circulated among the people, at a price which places them within reach of the poorest member of the community. They may indeed be despised by the rich and neglected by the learned, but they fall into the hands of the poor, to many of whom any plausible opinion in print bears the stamp of authority. At the same time, it must be lamented that there are treatises of a higher order, on the side of infidelity, which come recommended to the superior ranks, to men of knowledge and education, with all the charms of wit and elegance.

But it cannot be said that in this country the apologists and defenders of Christianity have been few, or unfurnished with abilities natural and acquired. Great have been the efforts of our profoundest scholars, both professional divines and laymen, in maintaining the cause of Christianity, and in repelling, by argument, by ridicule, by invective, by various and deep erudition, the assaults of the infidel. Yet what shall we say ? Notwithstanding their stupendous labours, continued with little intermission during many centuries, the great cause which they have maintained, is evidently, at this moment, on the decline. Though many of them, not contented with persuasion and argument, have professed to DEMONSTRATE the truth of the Christian religion, it is certain that a very great number of men in Christian countries continue unpersuaded, unconvinced, and totally blind to their demonstration. Such being the case, after all their voluminous productions, is it not fair to conclude that their defences, however celebrated, are either erroneous in the mode, or defective in the matter? Had their success been equal to their labours and pretensions, infidelity in Europe must now have been utterly exterminated.

For the learned labours of theologists, the subtilty of schoolmen, the erudition of critics, the ingenuity of controversialists, I feel a sincere respect; but I cannot help thinking that their productions have contributed rather to the amusement of reclusive scholars already persuaded of Christianity, than to the conversion of the infidel and the instruction of the PEOPLE. It appears to me, that some of the most elaborate of the writings in defence of Christianity are too cold in their manner, too metaphysical or abstruse in their arguments, too little animated with the spirit of piety, to produce any great or durable effect on the heart of man, formed as he is, not only with intellectual powers, but with fine feelings and a glowing imagination. They touch not the trembling fibres of sensibility*. They are insipid to the palate of the people. They have no attractions for the poor, the great multitude to whom the gospel was particularly preached. They are scarcely intelligible but to scholars in their closets, and while they amuse, perhaps, without convincing the understanding, they leave the most susceptible part of man, his bosom, unaffected. The busy world, eager in pursuit of wealth, honour, and pleasure, pays them no regard; though they are the very persons whose attention to religion, which they are

* ——— Lævâ in parte mamillæ
Nil salit.

——— No chord about the heart
Is taught to vibrate.

Juv.
too

too apt to forget, ought, in such books, chiefly to be solicited. The academic recluse, the theologist by profession, may perhaps read them as a task or as an amusement. He may consider them as works of erudition and exercises of ingenuity, claiming great praise as the product of literary leisure, and affording models for imitation to himself, who is in pursuit of similar praise. In the mean time the PEOPLE are erring and straying like lost sheep, and cannot in these calls recognize the voice of the good shepherd. Such works indeed seldom reach the people; and while they are celebrated in academic cloisters, their very existence is unknown among the haunts of men, in the busy hum of cities; where it is most desirable that they should be known, because there the great majority of human creatures is assembled, and there also the poison of temptation chiefly requires the antidote of religion. What avails it that defences of Christianity are very learned and very subtle, if they are so dry and unaffecting as to be confined in their effects to sequestered scholars, far removed from the active world, and some of them probably so firmly settled in the faith, as to require no new persuasives, no additional proofs to render them faithful followers of Jesus Christ?

Apologies and defences of this kind have very little effect in silencing infidel writers or changing their opinions. They frequently furnish fresh matter for dispute, and put polished arms into the hands of the enemy. By provoking discussion on points which were at rest, they raise sophistry from its slumbers, and blow the trumpet of controversial wars, which do great mischief before the re-establishment of peace. In the issue, the contending parties are silenced rather from weariness in the contest, and inattention of the spectators, than from conviction ; and Te Deum, as in other wars, is sung by those who are said to be vanquished, no less than by those who claim the honour of a complete victory.

Thus it has often happened that the writings of men, sometimes no less benevolent in their intentions than able in their exertions, have not only done no good to the cause of religion, but great injury. They have revived old cavils and objections, or invented new, in order to display ingenuity in refuting them ; cavils and objections which have frequently been answered, or which might never have occurred ; but which, when once they have occurred, produce suspicion and unsettled notions on topics never doubted*, and among honest men whose faith was firmly established. Such conduct is like that of a physician, who should administer doses of arsenic to his patients, in order to prove to them, at their risk, the sovereign power of his nostrum. The venom, finding a constitution favourable to its operation, triumphantly prevails over the antidote, and the preventive remedy cannot rescue the sufferer from his hapless fate.

I am persuaded, that even a sensible, thinking, and learned man might live his whole life in piety and peace, without ever dreaming of those objections to Christianity, which some of its most celebrated defenders have collected together from all ages and a great variety of neglected books, and then combined in a single portable volume, so as to render it a convenient manual or SYNOPSIS of infidelity. What must be the consequence? It must at least disturb the repose of the sensible, thinking, and learned man; and if it should be read and understood by the simple, the unlearned, the unthinking, and the ill-disposed, I am of opinion that its objections would be studied, its solutions neglected; and thus a very large number of recruits enlisted by defenders of the faith, as volunteers in the army of unbelievers.

* " The laboured productions," said a very popular deist, " of Dr. Clarke himself, on the existence of a Deity, have rather contributed to make for the other side of the question, and raised a thousand new doubts on the reader's mind." Wherever a very laborious effort seems to be made to defend a doctrine, the appearance of a great struggle in its defence leaves a suspicion that it is scarcely defensible.

As one exemplification of what I have here advanced, I mention, in this place, Bishop Warburton's View of Lord Bolingbroke's Philosophy. There the unbeliever sees the scattered arguments of scepticism and unbelief all picked and culled for him, without any trouble of his own, and marked with inverted commas, so as to direct the eye, without loss of time, to their immediate perusal. The book becomes an anthologia of infidelity. The full-blown flowers are gathered from the stalks, and conveniently tied up in a nosegay. The essence is extracted and put into a phial commodious for the pocket, and fitted for hourly use. The late bishop Horne also, in his facetious Letters on Infidelity, has collected passages from obscure books and one wretched anonymous pamphlet, and sent them abroad in such a manner as must of necessity cause them to be read and received, where they never would have found their way by their native force. Such ingenious and well-meaning divines resuscitate the dead, and give life to the still-born or abortive offspring of dullness and malignity. I might mention many more * instances of similar imprudence, in men of the deepest erudition and, I believe, the sincerest piety; but I am unwilling to follow their example, in pointing out to unbelievers compendiums, abridgments, and manuals of sceptical cavil. To say in their excuse that they refute those arguments which they insert so liberally from the writings of the unbeliever, may prove our candour, but not our judgment or knowledge of human nature. Evil is learned sooner and remembered longer than good; and it would be better to let the books and pamphlets of the deists sink into oblivion, than to preserve and extend them, by extracting their most noxious parts, and then mixing them with the productions of sound learning and unaffected piety. The refutations are often long, laboured, and tedious, while the objections are short and lively. The refutations are therefore either not read or soon forgotten, while the flippant sarcasm of the sceptic attracts attention and fixes itself in the memory. It must also be allowed, that the refutations are too often unsatisfactory; and that the weakness of the defence invites new attacks, and gives fresh courage to the restless enemy.

* A very remarkable one is that of Dr. John Leland, who employs nearly six hundred pages in viewing Lord Bolingbroke's Deistical Opinions, quoting the most striking passages on almost every page. This conduct is like preserving vipers or monsters in spirits for an exhibition.

The style also and manner of some among the celebrated defenders of Christianity is extremely improper*. It is not respectful. It treats Jesus Christ as if he were an inferior to the person who takes upon him to examine, as he phrases it, the pretensions of Jesus Christ. To speak in authoritative, inquisitorial language of the author of that religion by which the author himself professes to hope for salvation, is inconsistent with such professions,

* Some of them talk much and magisterially about the claims of Jesus (without adding the appellation of Christ, or any respectful epithet); they talk also, with a familiar air, of the carpenter's son, the Galilean, and even, as will be presently noticed more particularly, the peasant of Galilee.

and

and with a reverence for Christianity. Think of a poor, frail, sinful, mortal sitting a self-appointed judge, and like a lawyer in a human court of judicature, arraigning Jesus Christ, the Lord of life. A venal solicitor might thus have questioned the two thieves that were crucified with him, had they been accused at a modern police-office. The cold yet authoritative style of the tribunal has been much used by poor sinful mortals in examining, as it is called, that religion which brought life and immortality to light through the gospel. You would think the learned theologist, who assumes the office of an examiner, another Pontius Pilate. He places himself in the seat of judgment, and with an air of judicial importance decisively pronounces his opinion on the words and actions of that person, whom he owns, at the same time, to be the great Captain of salvation.

In such defences or examinations, Jesus Christ, as I have just now intimated, is spoken of in terms that must divest him of his glory, and therefore vilify him in the eyes of the gainsayers, and all unthinking people. But how, on the contrary, do the prophets represent him? Language has no terms of magnificence adequate to his dignity.

The prophets describe JESUS CHRIST as the most august personage which it is possible to conceive. They speak of him indeed as the seed of the woman and the Son of man; but at the same time describe him of celestial race. They announce him as a being exalted above men and angels; above "all principality and power; as the Word and "the Wisdom of God; as the eternal Son of "the Father; as the Heir of all things, by "whom God made the worlds; as the brightness of God's glory, and the express image of "his person."

B C

Thus

Thus speak the prophets of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ. Now let us hear an ingenious apologist and defender of him and his religion. A reverend author, highly estimable for his learning and ingenuity, and whom I sincerely esteem, speaking of Jesus Christ, in a book professedly written to vindicate his truth and honour, repeatedly calls him, "a Jewish peasant," and a "peasant of Galilee." "For what are we comparing?" says he, (in a comparison of Jesus Christ with Mahomet,) "a Galilean PEASANT, accompanied with a few fishermen, with a conqueror at the head of his army;" and again, in the next page, he says, "a Jewish PEASANT overthrew the religion of the world."

Unbelievers are commonly, what are called, men of the world; fascinated by its pomps and vanities. Is it the most likely means to overcome their prejudices, and teach them to bow the knee to Jesus, thus to lower his personal dignity? Was there any occasion for it? Do not the prophets, as I have just now observed, exalt him above every name? Why call him a Jewish PEASANT? The term is by no means appropriate to him, supposing that it were not an injudicious degradation of his character in the eyes of unthinking worldlings and malignant unbelievers. It is also peculiarly offensive to hear dignified ecclesiastics, who live in splendour and affluence entirely in consequence of the religion of Jesus Christ, speaking of him in their defences of his religion, as a PEASANT, as a person, compared to themselves, vile and despicable. Neither will such arguments as this appellation is meant to support, render service to Christianity. No; for the men of the world will say it was impossible for a peasant to effect so much; and therefore they will, like Mr. Gibbon, attribute the success of Christianity merely to political artifice. They will attribute it to king craft, statecraft, and priest-craft, forcing a religion upon the weak, the timorous, and the ignorant. They will attribute more to Constantine than to St. Paul; and will mock the Jewish PEASANT, and all who bow the knee to him. The representation becomes to the worldly man a stumbling-block and a rock of offence.

I might produce several other instances of great writers, all professed defenders of the faith, who have afforded similar precedents for degrading appellations of Jesus Christ. But I rather wish such precedents to be lost in eternal oblivion, than revived for the entertainment of the scorner, by a citation of them in this place. I shall only observe, that as expressions of this sort do not appear to flow from a reverential piety, so neither are they likely to excite and promote it.

Mere argumentative disquisition, indeed, unanimated by the spirit of piety and devotion, will never avail to convert unbelievers, and to diffuse the doctrines of Christianity. Life, death, heaven, and hell, are subjects of too much importance to be treated by a sincere mind, duly impressed by them, with the coolness of a lawyer giving an opinion on a statute or case in which another's property or privileges are concerned. The spirit of piety seems to have been wanting in some of the most logical and metaphysical defenders of Christianity. They speak of Christ, when they are examining the truth of his pretensions, as they call them, with calm indifference, as if they were dull virtuosi discussing the genuineness of a medal, or the authenticity of a manuscript, valuable merely as an amusing curiosity. If St. Paul had been no warmer an advocate than certain famous apologists for Christ's doctrine, he would never have prevailed with the Gentiles to relinquish their polytheism, and we of this island might have remained to this day in the darkness of idolatry. Without the spirit of piety, all proofs and defences of Christianity are a dead letter. The multitude will not even read them; and infidels, if they do not despise them too much to attend to them at all, will only read to find fresh matter for cavil and objection.

I may be wrong in this theory, and I therefore appeal to fact. The fact is evident, that, notwithstanding all that has been written to demonstrate * Christianity, by argument drawn from reasoning and history, infidelity has increased, and is every day increasing more and more. Let those who think the dry argumentative apologies irresistibly convincing, bring them forward now, and silence the gainfayers at once. The demonstrations of a Huet, the evidences of a Clarke, the reasonings of a Locke, a Grotius, a Hartley, should be presented to the people in the most striking manner, by public authority; and if they are really efficacious in producing conviction, we may be assured that infidelity will vanish at their appearance, like the mists of an autumnal morning, when the sun breaks forth in meridian splendour.

* "As the advocates of Christianity," says an acute writer, "have multiplied their demonstrations, the less it has been believed or regarded; so that now at length the effect seems nearly the same, as might have been expected if they had proved it to be false.—If Christianity appear to a plain man merely a question of words and names, or a curious speculation, he will leave it to the discussion of idle people and philosophers, and may probably treat it with indifference or contempt, in proportion to the zeal and elaborate argument with which it is agitated."

Enquiry into the present State of Religion in England, 1786.

But

But the truth is, they are already very much diffused, they are to be met with on every stall, and yet the Christian religion is said to be rapidly on the decline.

As these attempts appear to have failed, it cannot be blameable to devise some other method of calling back the attention of erring mortals to the momentous truths of revelation.

I have conceived an idea that our old English divines, who lived at and near the time of the reformation, were great adepts in the knowledge of genuine Christianity, and that their method of recommending it was judicious, because I know it was successful. There was much more piety in the last century than in the present; and there is every reason to believe that infidelity was then rare. Bishop Hall, among many others of his time, appears to me to have been animated with the true spirit of Christianity; and I beg leave to convey my own ideas on the best method of diffusing that spirit, in his pleasingly-pious and simple language.

“ There is not,” says the venerable prelate,
 “ so much need of learning as of grace to appre- “ hend those things which concern our everlasting “ peace; neither is it our brain that must be set to “ work, but our HEARTS. However excellent the “ use of scholarship in all the sacred employments
 “ of divinity; yet, in the main act, which imports “ salvation, skill must give place to AFFECTION.
 “ Happy is the soul that is possessed of Christ, how “ poor soever in all inferior endowments. Ye “ are wide, O ye great wits, while ye spend your“ selves in curious questions and learned extrava-“ gancies. Ye shall find one touch of Christ “ more worth to your souls than all your deep and “ laborious.

“ laborious disquisitions. In vain shall ye seek for
 “ this in your books, if you miss it in your BOSOMS.
 “ If you know all things, and cannot say I know
 “ whom I have believed, you have but knowledge “ enough to know yourselves completely miserable.
 “ The deep mysteries of Godliness, which, to the “ great clerks of the world are as a book clasped
 “ and sealed up, lie open before him (the pious “ and devout man) fair and legible; and while “ those book-men know whom they have heard of,
 “ he knows whom he hath believed.”

Christianity indeed, to the pious and unprejudiced, discovers itself, like the sun, by its own lustre. It shines with unborrowed light on the devout heart. It wants little external proof, but carries its own evidence to him that is regenerate and born of the Spirit. “ The truth of Christianity,” says a pious author, “ is the Spirit of God living and working in it; and when this Spirit is not the life of it, there the outward form is but like the carcase of a departed soul.”

Christian theology has certainly been confused and perplexed by the learned. It requires to be disentangled and simplified. Its object appears to me to consist in this single point, the restoration of the divine life, the image of God, (lost or defaced at the fall,) the restoration of it by the influence of the Holy Ghost.

When this shall be restored, every other advantage of Christianity will follow in course. A great degree of PURITY IN MORALS * is absolutely necesfary to the reception of the Holy Ghost, and an unavoidable consequence of his continuance. The attainment of GRACE is then the one thing necessary. It includes in it all gospel comfort, it teaches all moral virtue, and infallibly leads to LIGHT, life, and immortality.

* Common and preventing grace, it is asserted by the ablest divines, is given even before complete conversion, where the heart is sincere; and given in such a degree as to cause this purity of morals, and prepare the way for more abundant grace, for sanctification, consolation, and illumination. See the note at the end of the next Section.

SECTION II.

On the Sort of Evidence recommended to notice and attempted to be displayed in this Treatise.

Quid est fideliter Christo credere? est fideliter Dei mandata servare.—In what consists a faithful belief in Christ? It consists in a faithful obedience to his commandments. SALVIAN. de Gub. lib. 3.

I THINK it right to apprise my reader, on the very threshold, that if he expects a recapitulation of the external and historical evidence of Christianity, he will be disappointed. For all such evidence I must refer him to the great and illustrious names of voluminous theologists, who have filled with honour the professional chairs of universities, and splendidly adorned the annals of literature. I revere their virtuous characters; I highly appreciate their learned labours; I think the student who is abstracted from active life, and possesses leisure, may derive from them much amusement, while he increases his stores of critical erudition, and becomes enabled to discourse in the pulpit, or dispute in the schools on subjects of theology. But men, able to command their time, and competently furnished with ability for deep and extensive investigation, are but a small number in the the mass of human beings who want the comforts and the guidance of religion. That systematic or speculative treatise which may delight and instruct students, in the cool shade of philosophical retirement, will have little effect on the minds of others who constitute the multitude of mortals, eagerly engaged in providing for the wants of the passing day, or warmly contending for the glittering prizes of secular ambition. Indeed, I never heard that the laborious proofs of Christianity, in the historical and argumentative mode, ever converted any of those celebrated authors on the side of infidelity, who have, from time to time, spread an alarm through Christendom, and drawn forth the defensive pens of every church and university in Europe. The infidel wits, unconvinced and unabashed, wrote on in the same cause; deriving fresh matter for cavil from the arguments of the defenders; and re-affailing the citadel with the very balls hurled from its battlements.

What then, it may be justly asked, have I to offer? What is the sort of evidence which I attempt to display? It is an internal EVIDENCE of the truth of the gospel, consequent on OBEDIENCE to its precepts. It is a sort of evidence, the mode of obtaining which is pointed out by JESUS CHRIST himself, in the following declaration: "If any man will do my will, he shall KNOW of the DOCTRINE whether it be of God *."

But how shall he know? BY THE ILLUMINATION OF THE HOLY SPIRIT OF GOD, which is promised by Christ to those who do his will.

Therefore if any man seriously and earnestly desires to become a Christian, let him begin †, whatever

* John, vii. 17.

† If he begin with natural religion, faithfully practising its duties according to his conscience, the grace of God, it is humbly presumed, will ever doubts he may entertain of the truth of Christianity, by practising those moral virtues, and cultivating those amiable dispositions, which the written gospel plainly requires, and the grace of God will gradually remove the veil from his eyes and from his heart, so as to enable him to see and to love the things which belong to his peace, and which are revealed in the gospel only. Let him make the experiment and persevere. The result will be full conviction that Christianity is true. The sanctifying Spirit will precede, and illumination follow in consequence.

I take it for granted, that God has given all men the means of knowing that which it imports all men to know (and the means of grace are those means); but if, on the contrary, in order to gain the knowledge requisite to become a Christian, it were necessary to read such authors as Grotius, Clarke, Lardner, Locke, or Warburton, how few, in the great mass of mankind, could possibly acquire that knowledge and consequent faith which are thus supposed necessary to their salvation?

Every human being is capable of the evidence which arises from the divine illumination of grace. It is offered in the gospel to all. And they who reject it, and seek only the evidence which human means afford, shut out the sun, and content themselves either with total darkness or the feeble light of a taper.

“There is,” says the excellent Bishop Sander-son, “to the outward tender of grace in the ministry of the gospel, annexed an inward offer of the same to the HEART, by the SPIRIT of God going along with his WORD, which some of the will be vouchsafed to him in such measure, as shall render him, in due time, a firm believer in revealed religion.

“schoolmen

“ schoolmen call auxilium gratiæ generale, sufficient “ of itself to convert the soul of the hearer, if he “ do not resist the Holy Ghost, and reject the “ grace offered; which, as it is grounded on these “ words, Behold I stand at the door and knock, and “ upon very many passages of scripture beside,
 “ so it standeth with reason that the offer, if “ accepted, should be sufficient, ex parte sua, to do
 “ the work, which, if not accepted, is sufficient “ to leave the person, not accepting the same, “ inexcusable.”

The outward testimony to the truth of the gospel, is certainly a very strong one; but yet it is found insufficient without the inward testimony;
 for the truth of which assertion, I appeal to facts and experience. The best understandings (if the most celebrated authors and philosophers possessed the best understandings) have remained unconvinced by the outward testimony; while the meanest have been fully persuaded by the co-operation of the inward, the divine irradiation of the Holy Ghost shining upon and giving lustre to the letter of revelation.

But because the doctrine of divine influence on the human mind is obnoxious to obloquy*, I think it necessary to support it by the AUTHORITY of some of the best men and soundest divines of this nation. Such are the prejudices entertained by

* During the greater part of this century the philosophers on the continent, and their imitators in our own island, have been explaining away every thing mysterious in Christianity, and branding all those who maintain the pure doctrine of the gospel with the stigma of fanaticism. And of late, men pretending to sincerity in religious matters have adopted the title of rational Christians, and as a proof of their rationality, denied the divinity of the second and third persons in the Holy Trinity. By some strange neglect, these men have been permitted for many years to direct the public in the choice of books, not only in science and polite literature, but also in Christian theology.

many

many against the doctrine of divine influence and the witness of the Spirit, that I cannot proceed one step farther, with hope of success, till I have laid before my reader MANY passages in confirmation of it, from the writings of men who were the ornaments of their times, and who are at this day esteemed no less for their orthodoxy and powers of reasoning than their eloquence. I make no apology to my reader for the length of the quotations from them, because I am sure he will be a gainer, if I keep silence that they may be heard in the interval. My object is to re-establish a declining opinion, which I think not only true, but of prime importance. I therefore withdraw myself occasionally, that I may introduce those advocates for it, whose very names must command attention. If I can but be instrumental in reviving the true Spirit of Christianity, by citing their authority, theirs be the praise, and mine the humble office of recommending and extending their salutary doctrine.

“ And if it shall be asked (to express myself nearly in the words of Archbishop Wake) why in this volume I so often chuse the drudgery of a transcriber *, the reason is shortly this: I hoped that quotations from departed writers of great and deserved fame would find a more general and unprejudiced acceptance with all sorts of men, than any thing that could be written by any one now living, who, if esteemed by some, is yet in danger of being despised by more; whose prejudice to his person will not suffer them to reap any benefit by any thing, however useful, that can come from him; while such passages as these which I quote must excite respect and attention, unmixed (as the authors,

* The archbishop is apologizing for undertaking the work of translation instead of original composition.

authors are dead) with any malignant sentiment or prepossession against their persons, such as might close the eyes of the understanding against the radiance of truth."

My object in this work was not the acquisition or the encrease of literary fame, but solely the promotion of Faith, Hope, and Charity.

"This was the motive (to proceed with the words of Wake) that first induced me to set about this work; in the execution of which, should I chance to be mistaken, yet I cannot but persuade myself that the honesty of my intentions will excuse me to all indifferent persons. Let others, then, to whom God has given better opportunities and greater abilities, serve the church in better and higher performances. It shall suffice me in my way to minister to the souls of men; and if by this present undertaking I shall but in any measure have contributed to the reviving a true sense of piety and devotion among us, I shall heartily bless God, both that he first prompted me to undertake this invidious task, and has since enabled me, though amidst many infirmities, to go through with it*."

* The following text may, I think, confirm the opinion advanced in this Section, that the best EVIDENCE will arise from OBEDIENCE:

"And we are his witnesses of these things, and so is also the HOLY GHOST, whom God hath given to them that obey him." Acts, v. 37.

If a man will love me and KEEP MY WORDS, my Father will love him, and we will come unto him and make our abode with him. John, xiv. 23.

Preventing grace or common grace, as the theologians express themselves, will, if sufficiently attended to, lead to such obedience as will cause special grace.

"Common grace, which is not suspended upon the performance of any condition required in the covenant, is given to all those that live under the ministration of the gospel. My meaning is, they are all prevented, with that grace, which makes it possible for them to BEGIN WELL."

CLAGETT.

Such a degree of OBEDIENCE, therefore, as secures in future special grace, is practicable by those who are but very imperfect Christians. PRAYER added, as a branch of OBEDIENCE, will produce special grace.

SECTION III.

On the Prejudices entertained against this Sort of Evidence, and against all divine and supernatural Influence on the Mind of Man.

SINCE the time of Archbishop Laud, the most celebrated defenders of Christianity have thought it proper to expatiate, with peculiar zeal, on the excellence of natural religion. They probably had, what they thought, prudential reasons for their conduct; but it must not be dissembled, that in extolling natural religion they have appeared to depreciate or supersede revelation. The doctrine of supernatural assistance, the great privilege and glory of Christianity, has been very little enforced by them, and indeed rather discountenanced, as favouring of enthusiasm, and claiming, if true, a decided superiority over their favourite religion of nature.

Upon this subject, a very sensible writer thus expresses his opinion:

“Towards making and forming a Christian, if supernatural assistance of the divine Spirit was necessary at the beginning of the gospel, I do not see what should render it less necessary at any time since, nor why it may not be expected now. Human learning and human wisdom have rashly and vainly usurped the place of it.

“It is observable that these old principles are still to be found among dissenters, in a good measure, which is the reason why their opponents have dropped the use of them.

“As

“ As these doctrines were the principles and “ language of the dissenters, and others, who fol“ lowed the standard of the Parliament against “ King Charles the First, though they were not “ the particular motives of the war, nor could “ contract any just blame from the unhappy issue
 “ of that war; yet, at the restoration of King “ Charles the Second, the resentment which took “ place against the persons of the dissenters, and “ ran high, I apprehend, led the church clergy not “ only to be angry with the men, but to forsake
 “ their principles too, though right and innocent
 “ in themselves, and aforetime held in common “ among all Protestants.”

This, the author thinks, gave rise to the excessive zeal for enforcing natural religion, and for mere moral preaching, to the exclusion of the distinguishing doctrines of Christ, and particularly those sublime mysteries respecting the operation of the Holy Ghost, the very life and soul of Christianity.

“ Every thing,” says he, “ besides morality be“ gan, from that time, to be branded with the “ odious term of enthusiasm and hypocrisy.

“ That the cause of religion (observes the same “ writer) has declined for many years, every per“ son appears sensible. Among the various rea“ sons assigned for it, the principal, in my opinion, “ is, that the established ministers have suffered “ it to die in their own hands, by departing from “ the old method of preaching, and from their “ first and original tenets; which has given coun“ tenance to what is called natural religion, in “ such a measure, as to shut out revealed religion
 “ and supersede the gospel.

“ It is in vain to cry out against deists and infi“ dels, when the Protestant watchmen have de“ serted

“serted their post, and themselves have opened a “gap for the enemy. Learning and oratory, it “must be owned, are arrived at great perfection,
 “but our true old divinity is gone. Amid these “splendid trifles, the GOSPEL is really LOST*.”

It is certain that the profligate court of Charles the Second, in its endeavours to discredit the dissenters, many of whom were admirable scholars and divines, as well as holy and exemplary men in private life, contributed much to explode all doctrines concerning the SPIRIT. Unfortunately those clergymen who wished to be favoured at court, too easily conformed their doctrines to its wishes; and arguments from the pulpit united with sarcasms from the seat of the scorner, to render all who maintained the doctrine of grace suspected of enthusiasm and hypocrisy. Ridicule, in the hands of the author of Hudibras, though intended only to serve political purposes, became a weapon that wounded religion in its vitals.

The sect of Christians denominated Quakers certainly entertained many right notions respecting divine influence: and therefore, as the Quakers were disliked by the church, the doctrines which they maintained were to be treated with contempt. The SPIRIT, whose operations they justly maintained, became, under the direction of worldly policy, a word of reproach to them, and to all preachers who earnestly enforced similar opinions. Consequently aspiring clergymen of the church, wishing to avoid every doctrine which could retard their advancement, or fix a stigma of heterodoxy upon them, were very little inclined to preach the reality or necessity of divine influence. They feared

* See a Letter signed Paulinus, published in 1735.

feared the opprobrious names of enthusiasts or hypocrites, and so in effect became ashamed of the gospel of Christ *.

In process of time, arose the sect of the Methodists; who, however they may be mistaken in some points, are certainly orthodox in their opinions of the divine agency on the human soul. They found it in the scriptures, in the liturgy, in the articles, and they preached it with a zeal which to many appeared intemperate, and certainly was sometimes too little guided by discretion. The consequence was, that the spiritual doctrines, already vilified by the court of Charles the Second, and by the adversaries of the Quakers, became objects of general dislike and derision.

In the meantime, the gospel of Jesus Christ suffered by its professed friends as well as declared enemies. Regular divines, of great virtue, learning, and apparent piety, feared to preach the Holy Ghost and his operations, the main doctrine of the gospel, lest they should countenance the Puritan, the Quaker, or the Methodist, and lose the esteem of their own order, or of the higher powers. They often contented themselves, during a long

* “ To improve the People effectually, you must be assiduous in teaching the principles of the GOSPEL; and of the gospel, not as almost explained away by modern refiners, but as the truth is in Jesus, as it is taught by the church, of which you are members, and as you have engaged, by your subscriptions and declarations, that you will teach it yourselves. You must set forth the original corruption of our nature, and our sanctification by the influences of the DIVINE SPIRIT.

“ The truth, I fear is, that many, if not most of us, have dwelt too little on these doctrines in our sermons, partly from not having studied theology deeply enough to treat them ably and beneficially: God grant it may never have been for want of INWARDLY EXPERIENCING their importance!”

Archbishop SECKER's first Charge to his Clergy.

life,

life, with preaching morality only ; which, without the Spirit of Christianity, is like a beautiful statue from the hand of a Bacon ; however graceful its symmetry and polished its materials, yet wanting the breath of LIFE, it is still but a block of marble.

These prejudices remaining at this day, I have thought it right to recommend the sort of evidence which this book attempts to display, by citing the AUTHORITY of great divines, who, uninfluenced by secular hopes or fears, have borne witness to the truth as it is in Jesus. They are among the most celebrated theologists of this nation ; and such as few among living or recent writers will presume to vie with, in extent of knowledge, in power of expression, and zeal for Christianity.

Bitter is the anger of critics and controversialists in divinity. Arrows dipt in venom are usually hurled at every writer, who ventures to recommend a doctrine which they, from party motives, disapprove. I must seek shelter from their darts under the shields of such men as Bishop Taylor, Doctor Isaac Barrow, and others *, in and out of the establishment, who fought a good fight and KEPT THE FAITH, having no regard to worldly and sinister motives, but faithfully endeavouring to lead those, over whom they were appointed guides, by the radiance of gospel light, from the shadowy mazes of error into the pleasant paths of piety and peace.

Whatever obloquy may follow the teaching of such doctrine, I shall incur it with alacrity, because I believe it to be the truth, and that the happiness of human nature is highly concerned in its general reception. I will humbly say, therefore, with St. Paul, "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ Jesus, for it is the power of God unto salvation *."

* Leaders of the PEOPLE, by their counsels and by their knowledge of learning, meet for the PEOPLE, wise and eloquent in their instructions.

Ecclus. xlv. 4.

And as to those who deny the doctrine of divine influence, I fear they are guilty of blasphemy against the Holy Ghost. I speak diffidently, as it becomes every mortal on a subject so momentous; but let those who are eager to deny and even deride the doctrine, consider duly what is meant by the sin against the Holy Ghost, and let them remember this tremendous declaration of our Saviour himself, that BLASPHEMY AGAINST THE HOLY GHOST SHALL NOT BE FORGIVEN †. All other sins, we are expressly told, may be remitted, but on this the gates of mercy are closed. The denial of the Spirit's energy renders the gospel of no effect, extinguishes the living light of Jesus Christ, and involves wretched mortals in the darkness and death of Adam, fallen from the state of primitive perfection. It is represented as the greatest of all sins, because, in fact, it is productive of the greatest misery, defeating the benevolent purposes of a merciful Redeemer, and throwing back with ingratitude God's best gift to man.

* Rom. i. 16.

† Matth. xii. 31.

SECTION IV.

The proper Evidence of the Christian Religion is the Illumination of the Holy Ghost, shining into the Hearts of those who do not close them against its Entrance. The Opinion of Dr. Gloucester Ridley, cited in Confirmation of this Doctrine.*

NONE, says St. Paul, can say JESUS IS THE LORD, but by the HOLY GHOST †. If, then, St. Paul be allowed to have understood the Christian religion, it is certain, that mere human testimony will never convince the infidel, and produce that faith which constitutes the true Christian. Our theological libraries might be cleared of more than half their volumes, if men seeking the EVIDENCE of Christianity, would be satisfied with the declaration of St. Paul, and the great author of our religion.

There is a faith very common in the world, which teaches to believe, as an historical fact, that a person of the name of Jesus, a very good man, did live on earth, and that he preached and taught, under the direction of God or divine Providence, an excellent system of morality; such as, if duly observed, would contribute to their happiness, and recommend them to divine favour. But this kind of faith is not the right faith; it believes not enough, it is not given by the Holy Ghost; for he, in whom God dwelleth, confesseth that Jesus is the Son of God, and the SAVIOUR of the world ‡;

* Dr. Ridley was a scholar and divine of distinguished character. His sermons on the Holy Ghost are well worth the attention of all who would understand the essentials of Christianity.

† 1 Cor. xii. 3.

‡ 1 John, iv. 13, 14, 15.

but they who acknowledge Jesus only as a good man teaching morality, know him not as a SAVIOUR. Socrates taught fine morality; and so did Seneca, Epictetus, and many more; but they had not and could not teach the knowledge which leadeth to salvation.

Having premised thus much, I now begin the citation of my AUTHORITIES, all of which I entreat my reader to consider with the attention which they deserve.

“ Illuminating grace,” says Dr. Gloucester Ridley, “ consists not in the assent we give to the HISTORY of the gospel, as a narration of matters of fact, sufficiently supported by HUMAN EVIDENCE; for this may be purely the effect of our study and learning. The collating of copies, the consulting of history, the comparing the assertions of friends, and the concessions of enemies, may NECESSITATE * such a belief, a faith which the devils may have, and doubtless have it. This sort of faith is an acquisition of our own, and not a GIFT.” But FAITH IS THE GIFT OF GOD.

“ There may be a faith,” continues Dr. Ridley, “ which is not the work of the Spirit in our hearts, but entirely the effect of human means, our natural faculties assisted by languages, antiquities, manuscripts, criticism, and the like, without any divine aid, except the bare letter of the revelation; and as this faith may rise out of human abilities, so may it be attended with pride in our supposed accomplishments, envy of others

* Πίστες οὐκ ἡ γνωμῶνικαὶ ἀναγκαίαι, ἀλλ’ ἡ τὰς τοῦ πνεύματος ἐνεργείαις ἐξγινόμεν. BASIL in Psal. 195.—The right faith is not that which is FORCED by mathematical demonstration, whether we will or not; but that which grows in the mind from the operation or energies of the SPIRIT.

“ superior

“superior skill, and bitter strife against those who “mistake or oppose such truths; and is therefore
 “no manifestation of that Spirit which resisteth
 “the proud, and dispenses its graces only to the “humble. THIS WISDOM DESCENDETH NOT FROM “ABOVE. But the true saving faith, at the same “time that it informs the understanding, influences
 “the WILL AND AFFECTIONS; it enlightens the “eyes of the heart *, says the apostle; it is there,
 “in the HEART, that the Christian man believeth;
 “and if thou believest with thine HEART, thou shalt “be saved †; while infidelity proceedeth from an “aversion of our affections—from an evil heart
 “of unbelief ‡.”

Is it not therefore strange, that learned apologists, well acquainted with scripture, after reading these strong declarations, that the HEART must be impressed before saving faith can be fixed in it, should studiously avoid every topic which addresses itself to the affections, and coldly apply themselves to the understanding alone, in a language and manner like those of a mathematical lecturer solving a problem of Euclid §?

Infidelity is increasing, and will continue to increase, so long as divines decline the means of

* Περὶ φωτισμενους του οφθαλμου της καρδιας. Ephesians, i. 18.—Enlightening the eyes of the HEART. Almost all the old MSS. read καρδιας, and not διανοιας, as it stands in our printed copies.

See Mill's Lectiones Variantes.

RIDLEY.

† Rom. x. 9.

‡ Heb. iii. 12.

§ Many worthy and ingenious divines have spent the best years of their youth in the study of mathematics, logic, and metaphysics; and when they go forth from the academic shade, to instruct the people, still retaining their early habits, they give lectures in the pulpit on divinity, to villagers, mechanics, and tradesmen, in a style similar to that of an university professor talking of angles and triangles, moods and figures. The poor Fishermen of Galilee would not have known what to make of Christianity, thus disguised by scholastic language and refinement.

conversion and persuasion which the scriptures of the New Testament declare to be the only effectual means; so long as they have recourse to human reason and human learning ALONE, in which they will always find opponents very powerful. The Lord opened the heart of Lydia *, and then she attended to the things which were spoken of Paul. The Lord opens the HEARTS of all men at some period of their lives; but the vanity of the world, the cares of gain, the pride of life, shut them again, and reject the Holy Ghost. It is the business of divines to dispose those who are thus unfortunate and unwise, to be ready to receive the divine guest, should he again knock at the door of their hearts; but in doing this, they must preach the true gospel, which is not a system of mere morality or philosophy, but the sublime doctrine of grace†.

SECTION V.

The true and only convincing Evidence of the Religion of Christ, or the Illumination of the Holy Ghost, is offered to ALL. Historical Evidence and Argumentation adapted to few.

FROM the eternal Fountain of light, both natural and spiritual, there streams a light which lighteth every one that cometh into the world. Whoever loves that which is good, and just, and true, and desires to act a virtuous part in the place al-

* Acts, xvi. 14.

† It must be taught mediatè per verbum, IMMEDIATE per SPIRITUM.—Mediately by the Word; immediately by the Spirit.

lotted

lotted to him in this world, whether high or low, may be assured of the blessing of heaven, displaying itself not perhaps in worldly riches or honours, but in something infinitely more valuable—a SECRET INFLUENCE upon his heart and understanding, to direct his conduct, to improve his nature, and to lead him, though in the lowly vale, yet along the path of peace.

The nature of all men was depraved by the fall of Adam. The assistance of God's Holy Spirit was withdrawn. Christ came to restore that nature, and to bring down that assistance, and leave it as a GIFT to all mankind at his departure*.

In Adam ALL die, says St. Paul, but in Christ shall all be made alive. That is, in Adam all die a spiritual death, or lose the Paraclete, and the particle of the divine nature, which was bestowed on man on his creation; and in Christ all are made alive, spiritually alive, or rendered capable (if they do not voluntarily choose darkness rather than light) of the divine illumination of the Holy Ghost. The film is taken from the eyes of ALL; but let us remember that the eye-lids remain, which may be CLOSED by voluntary connivance, or by wicked presumption.

“ I will pour out my SPIRIT upon ALL flesh†.”

“ The grace which bringeth salvation hath appeared unto ALL men.”—“ This is the light which lighteth every man that cometh into the

* It does not appear (says Bishop Clayton) either in the Old or New Testament, that the LOGOS had any power over the Holy Spirit till after his Ascension. “ When all power was given unto him, both in heaven and earth.” Matthew, xxviii. 18, 19. “ The Spirit was not yet given, because Jesus was not yet glorified.” John, vii. 39.—But the Holy Ghost undoubtedly operated under God's direction, from the beginning.

† Joel, ii. 28.

“ world.”—“ It is his will, that ALL men should “ be saved, and come to the knowledge of the “ truth.”—“ Christ came to save sinners;” (and all men, both Jews and Gentiles, are under sin.)—“ Come unto me ALL ye that labour
 “ and are heavy laden.”—“ He has propitiated
 “ for the sins of the WHOLE world. His grace “ has been openly offered to ALL men in the “ gospel*.”

These passages, which no sophistry can elude, are sufficient to prove that the internal EVIDENCE of the gospel has a great advantage over the external, in the circumstance of its universality. All may be convinced by it who are willing †. But can this be said of dry, logical, systematic testimonies, which require learning, sagacity, and time, to be comprehended? Such testimonies are fit for few, and appear unlikely to produce vital religion in any. They serve men to talk about, they furnish occasion for a war of words ‡; but they leave the heart unaffected. Neither Jesus Christ nor his apostles thought proper to address men systematically. And are critics, linguists, and logicians wiser than the Author of their religion, and better informed than his apostles?

The word of God is like a two-edged sword, invincible where it is properly used; but the word of man is comparatively a feeble weapon, without point or edge. The word of man alone, though adorned with all eloquence, learning, and logical

* 1 Tim. ii. 4. 1 Tim. i. 15. Rom. iii. 9. Matth. ii. 28.
 † John, ii. 2. Tit. ii. 2.

‡ Η μὲν γὰρ χάρις εἰς ΠΑΝΤΑΣ ἐκκεχυσμένη. CHRYSOSTOM in Joan. Hom.—For grace indeed is poured out upon ALL.

‡ “DISPUTATION,” says Bishop Taylor, “cures no vice, but kindles a great many; and though men esteem it learning, yet “it is the most useless learning in the world.”

subtily,

subtilty, will never disseminate the true gospel, or stop the progress of unbelief. The word of God, rightly explained, so as to administer grace to the hearers and readers, will still preserve and extend Christianity, as it has hitherto done, notwithstanding all the opposition of the world, and those unfeeling children of it, whose hearts are hardened and understandings darkened by the pride of life. If, therefore, as St. James advises, any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to ALL men liberally, and upbraideth not, and it shall be given him. The wisdom here meant is not worldly prudence, or ostentatious philosophy, but that which maketh wise unto salvation; and certainly cannot be found in the cold didactic writings of those who rely entirely on their own reason, and deny or explain away the doctrine of grace.

Grace is the living gospel. Perishable paper, pens, ink, and printer's types, can never supersede the daily, hourly operation of the omniscient and omnipotent Creator and Preserver of the universe.

Let us remember, "that to EVERY MAN is given the manifestation of the Spirit to profit withal *;" but that to every man are by no means given genius and learning, or faculties to understand the proofs of Christianity, published by mathematicians, by logicians, and by deeply learned speculatists in ethics and metaphysics.

Mr. Paine, in his attack on Christianity, sums up all his objections at the close. The first and greatest is this, and I give it in his own words, though it is contrary to my practice, and opinion of propriety; often to cite the cavils of unbelievers; "The idea or belief of a word of God existing in PRINT, or in WRITING, or in SPEECH, is incon-

* 1 Cor. xii. 7.

CHRISTIAN PHILOSOPHY.

with itself, for reasons already assigned. Reasons, among many others, are the universal language; the mutability of the errors to which translations are subject; the possibility of totally suppressing such a word; the probability of altering it, or of fabricating the whole, and imposing it upon the world."

Now these objections cannot possibly be made to the evidence of the Spirit of God, the manifestation of the Spirit given to every man; because the Spirit speaks an universal language, addressing itself to the feelings of the heart, which are nearly the same in all countries, whatever sounds are uttered by the tongue; because its language (thus spoken to the heart) is not subject to the mutability of human dialects; because it is far removed from the possibility of misrepresentation by translators; because it cannot be totally suppressed; because it cannot be altered; because it cannot be fabricated or imposed on the world; because it is an EMANATION from the God of truth, the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever. This evidence sheds its light all over the Christian world, and is seen, like the sun in the heavens, by all who use their visual powers, unobstructed by self-raised clouds of anger, envy, pride, prejudice, vitious morals, and false philosophy*.

* No man can be convinced, well and wisely, of the holy, blessed, and undivided Trinity; but he that FEELS the mightiness of the FATHER begetting him to a new life, the wisdom of the SON building him up in a most holy faith, and the love of the Spirit of God making him to become like unto God. Bishop TAYLOR

SECTION VI.

Opinions of Bishop Taylor respecting the Evidence of the Holy Spirit ; " shewing" (as he expresses it) " how the Scholars of the University shall become " most LEARNED and most USEFUL."

I PROCEED to cite the authority of the celebrated Jeremy Taylor, a man who stands among the divines of England like Shakespeare among the poets, in proud pre-eminence. The haughtiness of learning may take offence at the following passage ; but let it be in justice to the author considered, that he could not decry learning from a consciousness of wanting it, for who, among the cavillers of the day, will be allowed to claim an equality in learning with Jeremy Taylor ? Let no man think it a disgrace to be censured by the rational Christians in company with the writer of the "Ductor dubitantium," and many other works abounding in deep learning, strict reasoning, as well as in the most affectionate piety.

" We have examined," says he, " all ways, in
 " our inquiries after religious truth, but one ; all
 " but GOD'S WAY *. Let us, having missed in all " the other, try this. Let us go to God for " truth ; for truth comes from God only. If we
 " miss the truth, it is because we will not find it ;
 " for certain it is, that all the truth which God
 " hath made NECESSARY, he hath also made legi-
 " ble and plain ; and if we will open our eyes we " shall see the sun, and if we will walk in the light,

* See Bishop Taylor's VIA Intelligentiæ, in his folio volume of Sermons, 1668.

“ we shall rejoice in the light. Only let us with“ draw the curtains, let us remove the impedi“ ments, and the sin that doth so easily beset us.
 “ That is GOD’S WAY. Every man must, in his “ station, do that portion of duty which God re“ quires of him; and then he shall BE TAUGHT OF “ GOD all that is fit for him to learn; there is no
 “ other way for him but this. The fear of the Lord “ is the beginning of wisdom; and a good under“ standing have all they that do thereafter. And “ so said David of himself: I have more under- “ standing than my teachers; because I keep thy com- “ mandments. And this is the only way which “ Christ has taught us. If you ask, what is truth?
 “ you must not do as Pilate did, ask the question,
 “ and then go away from him that only can give “ you an answer; for as God is the Author of “ truth, so he is the TEACHER of it, and the way
 “ to learn is this; for so saith our blessed Lord;
 “ If any man will do his will, he shall know of the “ doctrine whether it be of God or no.

“ This text is simple as truth itself, but greatly “ comprehensive, and contains a truth that alone “ will enable you to understand all mysteries, and “ to expound all prophecies, and to interpret all “ scriptures, and to search into all secrets, all, I “ mean, which concern our happiness and our “ duty. It is plainly to be resolved into this pro“ position:

“ THE WAY TO JUDGE OF RELIGION IS BY DOING
 “ OUR DUTY; AND THEOLOGY IS RATHER A DI-“ VINE LIFE THAN A DIVINE KNOWLEDGE.

“ In heaven indeed we shall first see and then “ love; but here on earth we must first love, and “ love will open our eyes as well as our hearts,
 “ and we shall then see and perceive and under“ stand.

“ Every man understands more of religion by “ his affections than by his reason. It is not the “ wit of the man, but the spirit of the man; not so “ much his head as his heart that learns the DIVINE “ PHILOSOPHY.

“ There is in every righteous man a NEW VI-“ TAL PRINCIPLE. The spirit of grace is the spi“ rit of wisdom, and teaches us by secret inspira“ tions, by proper arguments, by actual persua“ sions, by personal applications, by effects and “ energies; and as the soul of man is the cause of “ all his vital operations, so is the Spirit of God
 “ the life of that life, and the cause of all actions
 “ and productions spiritual; and the consequence “ of this is what St. John tells us of; Ye have re- “ ceived the UNCTION from above, and that anointing
 “ teacheth you all things—all things of some one “ kind; that is, certainly all things that pertain
 “ to life and godliness; all that by which a man “ is wise and happy. Unless the soul have a new “ life put into it, unless there be a vital principle “ within, unless the Spirit of life be the informer
 “ of the spirit of the man, the word of God will “ be as DEAD in the operation as the body in its “ powers and possibilities.

“ God’s Spirit does not destroy reason, but “ heightens it. God opens the heart and creates “ a new one; and without this creation, this new “ principle of life, we may hear the word of God,
 “ but we can never understand it; we hear the “ sound, but are never the better. Unless there
 “ be in our hearts a secret conviction by the Spi“ rit of God, the GOSPEL ITSELF IS A DEAD LET-“ TER.

“ Do we not see this by daily experience? Even “ those things which a good man and an evil man “ KNOW, they do not know both alike. An evil “ man

" man knows that God is lovely, and that sin is of " an evil and destructive nature, and when he is
 " reprov'd he is convinced; and when he is ob" served, he is ashamed; and when he has done,
 " he is unsatisfied; and when he pursues his sin,
 " he does it in the dark. Tell him he shall die,
 " and he sighs deeply, but he knows it as well as
 " you. Proceed, and say that after death comes " judgment, and the poor man believes and trem-
 " bles; and yet, after all this, he runs to commit
 " his sin with as certain an event and resolution
 " as if he knew no argument against it.

" Now since, at the same time, we see other
 " persons, not so LEARNED, it may be, not so " much versed in the scriptures, yet they say a " thing is good and lay hold of it. They believe
 " glorious things of heaven, and they live accord" ingly, as men that believe themselves. What " is the reason of this difference? They both read
 " the scriptures; they read and hear the same
 " sermons; they have capable understandings;
 " they both believe what they hear and what they " read; and yet the event is vastly different. The " reason is that which I am now speaking of: the " one understands by one principle, the other by
 " another; the one understands by NATURE, the " other by GRACE; the one by human learning,
 " the other by DIVINE; the one reads the scrip" tures without, and the other within; the one " understands as a son of man, the other as a son
 " of God; the one perceives by the proportions
 " of the world, the other by the measures of the " Spirit; the one understands by REASON, the " other by LOVE; and therefore he does not only " understand the sermons of the Spirit and per" ceive their MEANING, but he pierces deeper,
 " and knows the meaning of that meaning; that
 " is,

“ is, the SECRET OF THE SPIRIT, that which is “ spiritually discerned, that which gives life to “ the proposition and activity to the soul. And “ the reason is, that he hath a divine principle “ within him and a new understanding; that is “ plainly, he hath LOVE, and that is more than “ KNOWLEDGE, as was rarely well observed by “ St. Paul. Knowledge puffeth up; but charity* “ edifieth; that is, charity maketh the best scho“ lars. No sermons can build you up a holy “ building to God, unless the love of God be in “ your hearts, and purify your souls from all filthi“ nefs of the flesh and spirit.

“ A good life is the best way to understand “ wisdom and religion, because, by the experiences
 “ and relishes of religion, there is conveyed to “ them a sweetness to which all wicked men are “ strangers. There is in the things of God, to “ those who practise them, a deliciousness that “ makes us love them, and that love admits us “ into God’s cabinet, and strangely clarifies the un- “ derstanding by the purification of the heart. For “ when our reason is raised up by the Spirit of “ Christ, it is turned quickly into EXPERIENCE;
 “ when our faith relies upon the principles of “ Christ, it is changed into vision; and so long as “ we know God only in the ways of men, by con- “ tentious learning, by ARGUING and dispute, we “ see nothing but the shadow of him, and in that “ shadow we meet with many dark appearances, “ little certainty, and much conjecture; but when “ we know him λογω αποφαντικω, γαληνη νοερῃ,
 “ with the eyes of holiness and the instruction of “ gracious experiences, with a quiet spirit and the “ peace of enjoyment, then we shall hear what we

* Αγαπη—Love of God.

“ never

“ never heard, and see what our eyes never saw ;
 “ then the mysteries of Godliness shall be open “ unto us, and clear as the windows of the morn“ ing ; and this is rarely well expressed by the “ apostle. “ If we stand up from the dead and “ awake from sleep, then Christ shall give us
 “ LIGHT.”

“ For though the scriptures themselves are writ“ ten by the Spirit of God, yet they are written “ within and without ; and besides the light that “ shines upon the face of them, unless there be a “ light shining within our hearts, unfolding the “ leaves, and interpreting the mysterious sense of “ the Spirit, convincing our consciences and “ preaching to our hearts ; to look for Christ in “ the leaves of the gospel, is to look for the living “ among the dead. There is a life in them ; but “ that life is, according to St. Paul’s expression, “ hid with Christ in God, and unless the Spirit
 “ of God draw it forth, we shall not be able.

“ Human learning brings excellent ministeries “ towards this ; it is admirably useful for the re“ proof of heresies, for the detection of fallacies,
 “ for the letter of the scriptures, for collateral tes- “ timonies, for exterior advantages ; but there is “ something beyond this, that human learning “ without the addition of divine can never reach.

“ A good man, though unlearned in secular
 “ knowledge, is like the windows of the temple, “ narrow without and broad within ; he sees not “ so much of what profits not abroad, but what“ soever is within, and concerns religion and the “ glorifications of God, that he sees with a broad “ inspection, but all human learning without God
 “ is but blindness and folly. One man discourses
 “ of the sacrament, another receives Christ ; one “ discourses for or against transubstantiation ; but
 “ the

“ the good man feels himself to be changed, and “ so joined to Christ, that he only understands
 “ the true sense of transubstantiation, while he “ becomes to Christ bone of his bone, flesh of his “ flesh, and of the same spirit with his Lord.

“ From holiness we have the best instruction.
 “ For that which we are taught by the Holy Spi“ rit of God, this new nature, this vital principle “ within us, it is that which is worth our learn“ ing : not vain and empty, idle and insignificant “ notions, in which, when you have laboured till
 “ your eyes are fixed in their orbs, and your flesh “ unfixed from its bones, you are no better and no “ wiser. If the Spirit of God be your teacher, he “ will teach you such truths as will make you “ know and love God, and become like to him;
 “ and enjoy him for ever, by passing from famili-
 “ tude to union and eternal fruition.

“ Too many scholars have lived upon air and “ empty notions for many ages past, and troubled “ themselves with tying and untying knots, like “ hypochondriacs in a fit of melancholy, thinking
 “ of nothings, and troubling themselves with no“ things, and falling out about nothings, and be“ ing very wise and very learned in things that “ are not, and work not, and were never planted
 “ in Paradise by the finger of God. If the Spirit “ of God be our teacher, we shall learn to avoid “ evil and to do good, to be wise and to be holy,
 “ to be profitable and careful; and they that walk
 “ in this way shall find more peace in their con-“ sciences, MORE SKILL IN THE SCRIPTURES, more “ satisfaction in their doubts, than can be obtained
 “ by all the polemical and impertinent disputations “ of the world. The man that is wise, he that is “ conducted by the Spirit of God, knows better
 “ in what Christ's kingdom doth consist than to “ throw

“ throw away his time and interest, his peace and “ safety, for what? for religion? no: for the “ body of religion? not so much: for the garment
 “ of the body of religion? no, not for so much;
 “ but for the fringes of the garment of the body “ of religion; for such, and no better, are many “ religious disputes; things, or rather circum“ stances and manners of things, in which the “ soul and spirit are not at all concerned. The “ knowledge which comes from godliness is θεοτερον “ τι πασης αποδείξεως, something more certain and “ divine than all demonstration and human learn“ ing.

“ And now to conclude:—to you I speak, fa“ thers and brethren, you who are or intend to “ be of the CLERGY; you see here the best com“ pendium of your studies, the best alleviation of “ your labours, the truest method of wisdom. It “ is not by reading multitudes of books, but by “ studying the truth of God; it is not by labo“ rious commentaries of the doctors that you can “ finish your work, but the exposition of the Spi“ rit of God; it is not by the rules of metaphysics;
 “ but by the proportions of holiness; and when “ all books are read, and all arguments examined,
 “ and all authorities alleged, nothing can be found “ to be true that is UNHOLY. The learning of the “ fathers was more owing to their piety than their “ skill, more to God than to themselves. These “ were the men that prevailed against error, be- “ cause they lived according to truth. If ye walk
 “ in light, and live in the spirit, your doctrines
 “ will be true, and that truth will prevail.

“ I pray God to give you all grace to follow this “ wisdom, to study this learning, to labour for “ the understanding of godliness; so your time
 “ and your studies, your persons and your labours, “ will

“ will be holy and useful, sanctified and blessed, “ beneficial to men and pleasing to God; through “ him who is the wisdom of the Father, who is “ made to all that love him, wisdom, and righte“ ousness, and sanctification, and redemption.”

Thus far Bishop Taylor; and will any one among our living theologists controvert the merits of Bishop Taylor? Is there one among them whom the public judgment will place in the same rank with him? Will any one stigmatize him as an ignorant enthusiast? His strength of understanding and powers of reasoning, as well as eloquence, are strikingly exhibited in his sermons, in his Liberty of prophesying, and in his polemical writings. I must conclude, that he understood the Christian religion better than most of the sons of men; because, to admirable abilities and erudition, he united the finest feelings of devotion. His authority must have weight with all serious and humble inquirers into the subject of Christianity; and his authority strongly and repeatedly inculcates the opinion which I wish to maintain, that the best evidence of the truth of our religion is derived from the operation of the Holy Spirit on every heart which is duly disposed and prepared to receive it. Let his words be remembered: “ unless there be in our hearts a “ secret conviction by the Spirit of God, the gospel itself
 “ is a dead letter.”

And I wish it to be duly attended to, that the discourse from which the above extracts are made, was not addressed to a popular assembly, but to the clergy of an university, and at a solemn visitation. The Bishop evidently wished that the doctrines which he taught might be disseminated among the people by the parochial clergy. They were disseminated; and in consequence of such doctrines, Christianity flourished. They must be again again disseminated by men having authority, and all the parochial clergy, if they sincerely wish to check the progress of infidelity. The minds of men must be impressed with the sense of an influential DIVINITY in the Christian religion, or they will reject it for the morality of Socrates, Seneca, the modern philosophers, and all those plausible reasoners, to whom this world and the things which are seen are the chief objects of attention.

The old divines taught and preached with wonderful efficacy, because they spoke as men having authority from the Holy Ghost, and not as the disputers of this world, proud of a little science, acquired from heathen writers in the cloisters of an academy. There was a celestial glory diffused round the pulpits of the old divines; and the hearers, struck with veneration, listened to the preacher as to an undoubted oracle. Full of grace were his lips; and moral TRUTH was beautifully illuminated by divine. She easily won and firmly fixed the affections of men, clothed, as she was, with light as with a garment.

SECTION VII.

Passages from the celebrated Mr. John Smith, Fellow of Queen's College, Cambridge, corroborative of the Opinion that the best Evidence of the Christian Religion arises from the Energy of the Holy Spirit.*

MINUTE philosophers and minute critics, deriving all their stock of learning from the superficial imitators of Voltaire and Rousseau, entertain no adequate idea of the merit of our old divines, who drew their wisdom from the pure fountain of the Scriptures, and learned their philosophy from the schools of Greece and Rome. Such persons, from the deficiency of their knowledge, are inadequate judges of the merit of men like him from whom is taken the following quotation; and it is no wonder that they stigmatize them with the appellation of visionaries or fanatics. But with persons of true learning and good minds, I have no doubt but that the opinions of this profoundly learned author and virtuous man will have great weight. His style may be a little antiquated, like that of Bishop Taylor; yet it abounds with beauty, and must please all whose reading is not confined to modern pamphlets and French literature.

“ Divine truth is not to be discerned so much
 “ in a man's brain as in his heart. There is a “ divine and spiritual sense which alone is able to “ converse internally with the life and soul of di“ vine truth, as mixing and uniting itself with it; “ while vulgar minds behold only the body and

* See his Select Discourses, published in 1656.

“ outside

“ outside of it. Though in itself it be most in“ telligible, and such as the human mind may “ most easily apprehend, yet there is an INCRUST-“ ATION, as the Hebrew * writers call it, upon “ all corrupt minds, which hinders the lively taste
 “ and relish of it.

“ The best acquaintance with religion is a “ KNOWLEDGE TAUGHT OF GOD†: it is a light “ which descends from heaven, which alone is “ able to guide and conduct the souls of men to “ that heaven whence it comes. The Christian “ religion is an influx from God upon the minds
 “ of good men; and the great design of the gospel
 “ is to unite human nature to divinity.

“ The gospel is a mighty efflux and emanation “ of life and spirit, freely issuing forth from an “ omnipotent source of grace and love; that god-
 “ like, vital influence, by which the Divinity de“ rives itself into the souls of men, enlivening and “ transforming them into its own likeness, and “ strongly imprinting upon them a copy of its own “ beauty and goodness: like the spiritual virtue “ of the heavens, which spreads itself freely upon
 “ the lower world, and subtilely insinuating itself “ into this benumbed, feeble, earthly matter, be“ gets life and motion in it: briefly, it is that “ whereby God comes to dwell in us, and we in “ him.

“ The apostle calls the law the ministration of “ the letter and of death, it being in itself but a “ dead letter, as all that which is without a man’s “ soul must be; but on the other side, he calls
 “ the gospel, because of the intrinsical and vital “ administration of it in living impressions upon

* Incrustamentum immunditiei—An incrustation of filth.

† θεοδιδασκός γινώσκ.

“ the

" the souls of men, the ministration of the spirit,
 " and the ministration of righteousness; by which
 " he cannot mean the HISTORY of the gospel, or
 " those CREDENDA propounded to us to believe :
 " for this would make the gospel itself as much
 " an external thing as the law was ; and so we " see that the preaching of Christ crucified was
 " to the Jews a stumbling-block, and to the Greeks
 " foolishness. But indeed he means a VITAL EF-
 " FLUX from God upon the souls of men, whereby
 " they are made partakers of life and strength
 " from him.

" Though the history and outward communica" tion of the gospel to us in scriptis is to be always
 " acknowledged as a special mercy and advantage,
 " and certainly no less privilege to the Christians
 " than it was to the Jews, to be the depositaries
 " of the oracles of God, yet it is plain that the " apostle, where he compares the law and the " gospel, means something which is more than a " piece of book-learning, or an historical narration
 " of the free love of God, in the several contri-
 " vances of it for the redemption of mankind.

" The evangelical or new law is an efflux of " life and power from God himself, the original
 " of life and power, and produceth life wherever
 " it comes ; and to this double dispensation of " law and gospel does St. Paul clearly refer
 " 2 Cor. iii. 3. You are the epistle of Christ
 " ministered by us, WRITTEN NOT WITH INK,
 " but with THE SPIRIT OF THE LIVING GOD.—
 " Not in tables of stone ; which last words are a
 " plain gloss upon that mundane kind of admini" stering the law, in a mere external way, to " which he opposeth the GOSPEL.

" The gospel is not so much a system and body
 " of saving divinity, as the spirit and vital in" fluence

“fluence of it spreading itself over all the powers
 “of men’s souls, and quickening them into a DI-“VINE LIFE; it is not so properly a doctrine that “is wrapt up in ink and paper, as it is VITALIS “SCIENTIA, a living impression made upon the “soul and spirit. The gospel does not so much “consist in verbis as in virtute;—in the written “word, as in an internal energy.”

He who wishes to have an adequate idea of this profound scholar and most excellent man, will find a pleasing account of him in Bishop Patrick’s sermon at his funeral, subjoined to the SELECT DISCOURSES, which abound with beautiful passages, illustrative of the true Christian philosophy.

That I am not singular in thinking highly of Smith’s Select Discourses, is clearly manifested from the circumstance of Bishop WATSON’s having inserted one of them in his Collection of Theological Tracts. The bishop indeed expressly says, that all the discourses of Smith are very valuable, and particularly that which he has selected, and which indeed was translated into Latin by Le Clerc, an excellent judge, and prefixed to his Commentary on Isaiah.

SECTION VIII.

The Opinion of Bishop Sanderson on the Impossibility of becoming a Christian without supernatural Assistance.

As the weight of the authorities which I adduce must be proportioned to the opinion the reader entertains of the men who furnish them, I think it right to say something of their characters; but but most of them are so well known, that I should almost as soon think of pointing out the lustre of the day-star in the heavens, as of displaying in detail their splendid and acknowledged merits. But if any should be unacquainted with Bishop Sanderfon's high renown, I must refer him to the life of the bishop, most beautifully delineated by Isaac Walton. Suffice it to say, that it can never be suspected of Bishop Sanderfon that his religious sentiments originated in imbecility of intellect; for he has proved himself the first logician and acutest reasoner of his time. Vigour of understanding and clearness of conception were his characteristics. Let those who are inclined to despise his religious opinions, prove themselves competent to assume a superiority over him, by equaling his book of Logic and his Cases of Conscience.

"It was Simon Magus's error," says Bishop Sanderfon, "to think that the gift of God might be purchased with money; and it hath a spice of his sin, and so may go for a kind of simony, to think that spiritual gifts may be purchased with labour. You may rise up early and go to bed late, and study hard, and read much, and devour the marrow of the best authors, and when you have done all, unless God give a blessing unto your endeavours, be as thin and meagre in regard of true and useful learning, as Pharaoh's * lean kine were after they had eaten the fat ones. It is God that both ministereth seed to the sower, and multiplieth the seed sown; the principal and the increase are both his."

"It is clear that all Christian virtues and graces, though wrought immediately by us, and with the free consent of our own wills, are yet the

* Genesis, xli. 21.

“ fruit of God’s Spirit working in us. That is to “ say, they do not proceed originally from any “ strength of nature, or any inherent power in “ man’s free-will ; nor are they acquired by the “ culture of philosophy, the advantages of education,
 “ or any improvement whatsoever of natural abili“ ties by the helps of art or industry : but are in “ truth the proper effects of that supernatural
 “ grace which is given unto us by the good plea“ sure of God the Father, merited for us by the “ precious blood of God the Son, and conveyed “ into our hearts by the sweet and secret inspira“ tions of God the Holy Ghost. Love, joy, and “ peace are fruits, not at all of the flesh, but “ merely of the Spirit.

“ All those very many passages in the New “ Testament which either set forth the unframe-“ ableness of our nature to the doing of any thing “ that is good, (not that we are sufficient of ourselves
 “ to think a good thought ; in me, that is in my flesh, “ *there dwelleth no good thing ; and the like,) or “ else ascribe our best performances to the glory “ of the grace of God, (without me you can do no- “ thing. All our sufficiency is of God. Not of your- “ selves ; it is the gift of God. It is God that “ worketh in you both the will and deed† ; and the “ like,) are so many clear confirmations of the “ truth. Upon the evidence of which truth it is “ that our mother the church hath taught us in “ the public service to beg at the hands of almighty “ God that he would endue us with the grace of his “ Holy Spirit, to amend our lives according to his holy “ word : and again, (consonantly to the matter we “ are in hand with, almost in terminis,) that he

* 2 Cor. iii. 5. Romans, vii. 18.

† John, xv. 7. 2 Cor. iii. 5. Eph. ii. 8. Phil. ii. 15.

“ would

“ would give to all men increase of grace to bear “ meekly his word, and to receive it with pure affec“ tion, and to bring forth the fruits of the Spirit.
 “ As without which grace it were not possible for “ us to amend our lives, or to bring forth such “ fruits, according as God requireth in his holy “ word.

“ And the reason is clear: because as the tree “ is, such must the fruit be. Do men look to “ gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles *? Or “ can they expect from a salt fountain other than “ brackish water? Certainly, what is born of flesh
 “ can be no better than flesh. Who can bring a “ clean thing out of that which is unclean †? Or “ how can any thing that is good proceed from a “ heart, all the imaginations of the thoughts whereof
 “ are only and continually evil ‡? If we would have “ the fruit good, reason will (and our Saviour “ prescribeth the same method) that order be taken,
 “ first to make the tree good §.

“ But you will say, it is impossible so to alter
 “ the nature of the flesh as to make it bring forth
 “ good spiritual fruit; as it is to alter the nature
 “ of a crab or thorn, so as to make it bring forth
 “ a pleasant apple. Truly, and so it is: if you “ shall endeavour to mend the fruit by altering
 “ the stock, you shall find the labour altogether “ fruitless;—a crab will be a crab still, when you “ have done what you can: and you may as well
 “ hope to wash an Ethiopian white, as to purge
 “ the flesh from sinful pollution.

“ The work therefore must be done quite an-
 “ other way: not by alteration, but ADDITION. That “ is, leaving the old principle to remain as it was,

* Mat. vii. 16.

† Gen. vi. 5.

‡ Job, xiv. 4.

§ James, i. 21.

“ by super-inducing ab extra a new principle, of a “ different and more kindly quality. We see the “ experiment of it daily in the grafting of trees ;
 “ a crabstock, if it have a cion of some delicate “ apple artfully grafted in it ; look what branches “ are suffered to grow out of the stock itself, they “ will all follow the nature of the stock, and if “ they bring forth any fruit at all, it will be sour
 “ and stiptic. But the fruit that groweth from “ the graft will be pleasant to the taste, because “ it followeth the nature of the graft. We read
 “ of λογος ἐμφυτός, an engrafted word. Our carnal “ hearts are the old stock ; which, before the word “ of God be grafted in it, cannot bring forth any “ spiritual fruit acceptable to God : but when, by “ the powerful operation of his Holy Spirit, the “ word which we hear with our outward ears is “ inwardly grafted therein, it then bringeth forth
 “ the fruit of good living. So that all the bad “ fruits that appear in our lives come from the old “ stock, the flesh : and if there be any good fruit
 “ of the Spirit in us, it is from the virtue of that “ word of grace that is grafted in us.”

What modern philosopher or divine can rival Bishop Sanderson ? His Praelectiones rank him with Aristotle ; his piety, with the chief of the apostles.
 Yet there is little doubt but that many a critic, whose attainments would not qualify him even to read his Latin works, would condemn his divinity,
 if it were now first published, as weak and fanatical.
 But let us beware of being misled in the most important matters, by the arrogant decisions of superficial men filling up the mighty void of sense and solid learning, with self-conceit and a malignant spirit of detraction.

SECTION IX.

Dr. Isaac Barrow's Opinion of the Evidence of Christianity, afforded by the illuminating Operation of the Holy Spirit ; and on the Holy Spirit in general.

OUR country has produced many divines equally admirable for their doctrine and their eloquence, and, I believe, all competent judges will allow that Barrow stands among them pre-eminently distinguished. One of the first mathematicians and philosophers of his age, he thought it no derogation from his character as an acute reasoner, to maintain the doctrine of supernatural influence ; that doctrine which some very inferior writers of the present day wish to stigmatize as fanatical and ridiculous.

“ Our reason,” says Dr. Barrow, “ is shut up,
 “ and barred with various appetites, humours, and “ passions against gospel truths ; nor can we ad“ mit them into our hearts, except God, by his “ spirit, do set open our mind, and work a free “ passage for them into us. It is he who com“ manded the light to shine out of darkness, that “ must, as St. Paul speaketh, illustrate our hearts
 “ with the knowledge of these things. AN UNCTION*
 “ from the Holy One, clearing our eyes, softening
 “ our hearts, healing our distempered faculties,

* This word, though used in scripture, and by the most learned divines, has been the subject of laughter among many ; and the use of it has subjected this treatise of mine to the scoffs of those who sit in the seat of the scorner. In defence of it, I appeal to the apostle St. John ; and, as Dr. Barrow was not ashamed to adopt it, I think I may venture to use it without scruple.

“ must, as St. John informeth us, TEACH and “ persuade us this sort of truths. A hearty belief
 “ of these seemingly incredible propositions must “ indeed be, as St. Paul calleth it, the GIFT of “ God, proceeding from that Spirit of faith whereof
 “ the same apostle speaketh; such faith is not, as “ St. Basil saith, engendered by geometrical necef- “ sities, but by the effectual operations of the Holy “ Ghost. Flesh and blood will not reveal to us, “ nor can any man with clear confidence say that “ Jesus is the Lord (the MESSIAS, the infallible “ Prophet, the universal Lawgiver, the Son of the “ living God) but by the Holy Ghost. Every spi“ rit which sincerely confesseth him to be the “ Christ, we may, with St. John, safely conclude
 “ to be of God; for of ourselves we are not suffi“ cient, as the apostle says, λογίζεσθαι τι, to rea“ son out or collect any of these things. We “ NEVER, of our own accord, without DIVINE AT-“ TRACTION, should come unto Christ; that is, “ should effectually consent unto and embrace his “ institution, consisting of such unplausible propo“ sitions and precepts. Hardly would his own “ disciples, who had so long enjoyed the light of “ his conversation and instruction, have admitted
 “ it, if he had not granted them that Spirit of truth, “ whose work it was οδηγειν, to lead them in this “ unknown and uncouth way; αναγγελεν, to tell “ them again and again, that is, to instill and in“ culcate these crabbed truths upon them; υπο“ μνησκειν, to admonish, excite, and urge them
 “ to the marking and minding them: hardly, I “ say, without the guidance of this Spirit, would “ our Lord’s disciples have admitted divers evange- “ lical truths, as our Lord himself told them. I “ have, said he, many things beside to say to you,
 “ but

“ but ye cannot as yet bear them; but when he,
 “ the Spirit of truth, shall come, he shall CONDUCT
 “ YOU INTO ALL TRUTH.

“ As for the mighty sages of the world, the “ learned scribes, the subtle disputers, the deep “ politicians, the wise men according to the flesh,
 “ the men of most refined judgment and improved
 “ REASON * in the world's eye, they were more “ ready to deride than to regard, to impugn than “ to admit these doctrines; to the Greeks, who “ sought wisdom, the preaching of them seemed “ foolishness.

“ It is true, some few sparks or flashes of this “ divine knowledge may possibly be driven out by “ rational consideration. Philosophy may yield
 “ some twilight glimmerings thereof. Common “ reason may dictate a faint consent unto, may “ produce a cold tendency after some of these things;
 “ but a clear perception, and a resolute persuasion
 “ of mind, that full assurance of faith and inflexi-“ ble confession of hope ομολογία της ελπίδος ακλήνης, “ which the apostle to the Hebrews speaks of,
 “ that full assurance of understanding, that abund“ ant knowledge of the divine will in all spiritual “ wisdom and understanding, with which St. Paul “ did pray that his Colossians might be replenished;
 “ these so perfect illustrations of the mind, so “ powerful convictions of the heart, do argue “ immediate influences † from the Fountain of life
 “ and wisdom, the DIVINE SPIRIT. No external

* Voltaire, Rousseau, Helvetius, Gibbon, Hume, and many most celebrated authors, were certainly not deficient in intellectual powers; and they reprobated and derided Christianity. In what then were they deficient? I fear, in GRACE, in the spirit of truth; which God denies to the proud, and gives to the humble.

† Immediate influences: what will the rational Christians say of the great Barrow for this expression?

“ instruction could infuse, no interior discourse
 “ could excite them; could penetrate these opacities of ignorance, and dissipate these thick mists
 “ of prejudice, wherein nature and custom do involve us; could so thoroughly awaken the lethargic stupidity of our souls; could supple the refractory stiffness of our wills; could mollify the stony hardness of our hearts; could void our natural aversion to such things, and quell that φρονημα σαρκος, that carnal mind, which, St. Paul says, is enmity against God, for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be; could depress those υψωματα, those lofty towers of self-conceit, reared against the knowledge of God, and demolish those οχυρωματα, those bulwarks of self-will and perverse stomach opposed against the impressions of divine faith, and captivate παν νοημα, every conceit and device of ours to the obedience of Christ and his discipline. Well, therefore, did St. Paul pray in behalf of his Ephesians, that God would bestow on them the Spirit of wisdom and revelation in the acknowledgment of him, and that the eyes of their mind might be enlightened, so as to know the hope of their calling; that is, to understand and believe the doctrines of Christianity.*

“ We proceed now to the peculiar offices, functions, and operations of the Holy Spirit: many such there are in an especial manner attributed or appropriated to him; which, as they respect God, seem reducible to two general ones: the declaration of God’s mind, and the execution of his will; as they are referred to man, (for in regard to other beings, the scripture doth not so much consider what he performs, it not concerning us to know it,) are especially the “ producing

“ producing in us all actions requisite or conducive to our eternal happiness and salvation ; to which may be added, the intercession between God and man, which jointly respecteth both.

“ First, it is his especial work to disclose God’s mind to us ; whence he is styled the Spirit of truth, the Spirit of prophecy; the Spirit of revelation ; for that all supernatural light and wisdom have ever proceeded from him. He instructed all the prophets that have been since the world began, to know, he enabled them to speak the mind of God concerning things present and future. Holy men (that have taught men their duty, and lead them in the way to bliss) were but his instruments, speaking as they were moved by the Holy Ghost.

“ By his inspiration the holy scriptures (the most full and certain witness of God’s mind, the law and testimony by which our life is to be directed and regulated) were conceived. He guided the apostles into all truth, and by them instructed the world in the knowledge of God’s gracious intentions towards mankind, and in all the holy mysteries of the gospel : That which in other ages was not made known unto the sons of men, as it is now revealed unto his holy apostles and prophets by the Spirit. Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him ; but God hath revealed them to us by his Spirit, saith St. Paul. All the KNOWLEDGE we can pretend to in these things doth proceed merely from his revelation, doth wholly rely upon his authority.

“ To him it especially belongs to execute the will of God, in matters transcending the ordinary power and course of nature. Whence he “ is called the power of the Most High, (that is,

 “ the substantial power and virtue of God,) the “ finger of God (as by comparing the expression of “ St. Luke and St. Matthew may appear); and “ whatever eminent God hath designed, he is said
 “ to have performed by him; by him he framed
 “ the world, and (as Job speaketh) garnished the “ heavens. By him he governeth the world, so “ that all extraordinary works of Providence,
 “ (when God, beside the common law and usual “ course of nature, doth interpose to do any thing,)
 “ all miraeulous performances are attributed to “ his energy. By him our Saviour, by him the “ apostles, by him the prophets, are expressly said
 “ to perform their wonderful works; but espe“ cially by him God manages that great work, so “ earnestly designed by him, of our salvation;
 “ working in us all good dispositions, capacifying “ us for salvation, directing and assisting us in all “ our actions tending thereto.

“ We naturally are void of those good disposi“ tions in understanding, will, and affections which “ are needful to render us acceptable unto God, “ fit to serve and please him, capable of any fa“ vour from him, of any true happiness in our“ selves. Our minds naturally are blind, igno“ rant, stupid, giddy, and prone to error, espe“ cially in things supernatural and spiritual, and “ abstracted from ordinary sense. Our wills are “ froward and stubborn, light and unstable, in“ clining to evil, and averse from what is truly “ good; our affections are very irregular, disor“ derly, and unsettled; to remove which bad dis“ positions, (inconsistent with God's friendship “ and favour, driving us into sin and misery,) and
 “ to beget those contrary to them, the KNOW-“ LEDGE and belief of divine truth, a love of “ goodness

“ goodness and delight therein; a well-composed, “ orderly, and steady frame of spirit, God in “ mercy doth grant to us the virtue of his Holy “ Spirit; who first opening our hearts, so as to let
 “ in and apprehend the light of divine truth, then,
 “ by representation of proper arguments, persuading
 “ our REASON to embrace it, begetteth divine “ knowledge, wisdom, and faith in our minds, which “ is the work of illumination and instruction, the “ first part of his office respecting our salvation.

“ Then by continual impressions he bendeth
 “ our inclinations, and mollifieth our hearts, and “ tempereth our affections to a willing compliance “ with God’s will, and a hearty complacence in “ that which is good and pleasing to God; so “ breeding all pious and virtuous inclinations in “ us, reverence towards God, charity to men, so“ briety and purity as to ourselves, with the rest
 “ of those amiable and heavenly virtues of soul,
 “ which is the work of sanctification, another “ great part of his office.

“ Both these operations together (enlightening
 “ our minds, sanctifying our wills and affections)
 “ do constitute and accomplish that work, which “ is styled the regeneration, renovation, vivifica-“ tion, new creation, resurrection of a man; the “ faculties of our souls being so improved, that “ we become, as it were, other men thereby;
 “ able and apt to do that for which before we “ were altogether indisposed and unfit.

“ He also directeth and governeth our actions, “ continually leading and moving us in the ways
 “ of obedience to God’s holy will and law. As “ we live by him, (having a new spiritual life im“ planted in us,) so we walk by him, are conti“ nually led and acted by his conduct and help.
 “ He reclaimeth us from error and sin; he sup“ porteth.

“ porteth and strengtheneth us in temptation ; he “ adviseth and admonisheth, exciteth and encour“ rageth us to all works of piety and virtue.

“ Particularly he guideth and quickeneth us in “ devotion, shewing us what we should ask, raising
 “ in us holy desires and comfortable hopes, dis“ posing us to approach unto God with firm dis“ positions of mind, love, and reverence, and “ humble confidence.

“ It is also a notable part of the Holy Spirit’s “ office to comfort and sustain us in all our reli“ gious practice, so particularly in our doubts, “ difficulties, distresses, and afflictions ; to beget “ joy, peace, and satisfaction in us, in all our “ performances, and in all our sufferings, whence
 “ the title of Comforter belongeth to him.

“ It is also another part thereof to assure us of “ God’s gracious love and favour, and that we “ are his children ; confirming in us the hopes of “ our everlasting inheritance. We feeling our“ selves to live spiritually by him, to love God
 “ and goodness, to thirst after righteousness, and “ to delight in pleasing God, are thereby raised to “ hope God loves and favours us ; and that he “ having, by so authentic a seal, ratified his word
 “ and promise, having already bestowed so sure
 “ a pledge, so precious an earnest, so plentiful
 “ first-fruits, will not fail to make good the re“ mainder designed and promised us, of everlast“ ing joy and bliss.”

Let no man be afraid or ashamed of maintaining opinions on the divine energy, which are thus supported by a scholar and philosopher like ISAAC BARROW ; a name which, at Cambridge, has ever stood next in honour to ISAAC NEWTON.

SECTION X.

Bishop Bull's Opinion on the Influence of the Spirit of God on the Mind of Man, and its Union with it; the Loss of that Spirit by Adam's Fall, and the Recovery of it by Christ.

OF Bishop Bull it may justly be said that he was one of the greatest ornaments and firmest pillars * of the church. If our modern objectors possessed a due degree of humility, they would at least hesitate before they condemned a doctrine sanctioned by a man of his profound learning and matchless sagacity.

“ The second way,” says Bishop Bull, “ by which the Spirit of God witnesseth with our spirit, that we are the sons of God, is by enlightening our understandings and strengthening the eyes of our minds, as occasion requires, to discern those gracious fruits and effects which God hath wrought in us.

“ The Spirit of God, which in the first beginning of things moved upon the face of the great deep, and invigorated the chaos, or dark and confused heap of things, and caused light to shine out of that darkness, can, with the greatest ease, when he pleases, cause the light of divine consolation to arise and shine upon the dark and disconsolate soul. And this he often doth. I may here appeal to the EXPERIENCE of many good Christians, who sometimes find a sudden joy coming into their minds, ENLIGHTENING their UNDERSTANDINGS, dispelling all clouds

* Grande decus columenque.

“ from

“ from thence, warming and enlivening their af“ fections, and enabling them to discern the graces
 “ of God shining in their brightness, and to FEEL “ them vigorously acting in their souls, so that “ they have been, after a sort, TRANSFIGURED
 “ with their Saviour, and wished, with St. Peter,
 “ that they might always dwell on that mount “ Tabor.*

“ Man may be considered in a double relation ;
 “ first in relation to the natural, animal, and “ earthly life ; and so he is a perfect man, that “ hath only a reasonable soul and body adapted to “ it ; for the powers and faculties of these are suf“ ficient to the exercise of the functions and ope“ rations belonging to such a life. But secondly, “ man may be considered in order to a supernatu“ ral end, and as designed to a spiritual and ce“ lestial life ; and of this life the SPIRIT OF GOD “ is the principle. For man’s natural powers and “ faculties, even as they were before the fall, EN-“ TIRE, were not sufficient or able of themselves “ to reach such a supernatural end, but needed the “ power of the DIVINE SPIRIT to strengthen, ele“ vate, and raise them. He that denies this, op“ poses himself against the stream and current of “ the holy scriptures, and the consent of the Ca“ tholic church. Therefore to the perfect con“ stitution of man, considered in this relation, a “ reasonable soul and a body adapted thereunto “ are not sufficient ; but there is necessarily re“ quired an union of the DIVINE SPIRIT with “ both, as it were a THIRD ESSENTIAL PRINCIPLE.
 “ This, as it is a certain truth, so it is a great MYS-“ TERY OF CHRISTIANITY.*

“ The great Basil, in his homily intitled, Quod
 “ Deus non est Author peccati, speaking of the na“ ture of man, as it was at first created, hath “ these

“ these words: What was the chief or principal “ good it enjoyed? THE ASSESSION OF GOD AND “ ITS CONJUNCTION WITH HIM BY LOVE; from
 “ which, when it fell, it became depraved with va- “ rious and manifold evils. So in his book, de “ Spiritu Sancto, cap. 15, he plainly tells us, The “ dispensation of God and our Saviour towards man, “ is but the recalling of him from the fall, and his “ return into the friendship of that God, from that “ alienation which sin had caused. This was the end “ of Christ's coming in the flesh, of his life and con- “ versation described in the gospel, of his passion, cross, “ burial, and resurrection; that man, who is saved
 “ by the imitation of Christ, might regain that AN- “ TIENT ADOPTION: where he plainly supposeth
 “ that man before his fall had the adoption of a “ son, and consequently the Spirit of adoption.
 “ And so he expressly interprets himself after“ wards in the same chapter: By the Holy Spirit
 “ we are restored into paradise, we regain the king- “ dom of heaven, we return to the adoption of sons.
 “ Again, (Homil. advers. Eunomium 5, p. 117.)
 “ which have these express words: We are called
 “ in the sanctification of the Spirit, as the apostle
 “ teacheth. This (Spirit) renews us, and makes us “ again the image of God, and by the laver of rege- “ neration, and the renewing of the Holy Ghost, we “ are adopted to the Lord, and the new creature
 “ again partakes of the Spirit, of which being de- “ prived, it had waxed old. And thus man becomes “ again the image of God, who had fallen from the “ divine similitude, and was become like the beasts
 “ that perish.

“ St. Cyril (7th Dial. de Trin. p. 653.) delivers
 “ the same doctrine with great perspicuity and “ elegance, in these words: For when the animal “ (viz. man) had turned aside unto wickedness, and “ out

" out of too much love of the flesh had superinduced on
 " himself the disease of sin, THAT SPIRIT WHICH " FORMED HIM AFTER THE DIVINE IMAGE, AND
 " AS A SEAL WAS SECRETLY IMPRESSED ON HIS " SOUL, WAS SEPARATED FROM HIM, and so he " became corruptible and deformed, and every way
 " vicious. But after that the Creator of the universe
 " had designed to restore to its pristine firmness and
 " beauty that which was fallen into corruption, and
 " was become adulterated and deformed by sin super-
 " induced, he sent again into it that divine and holy " Spirit which was withdrawn from it, and which " hath a natural aptitude and power to change us into
 " the celestial image, viz. by transforming us into his " own likeness. And in the fourth book of the " same work, When the only begotten Son was made
 " man, finding man's nature bereft of its antient and
 " primitive good, he hastened to transform it again
 " into the same state, out of the fountain of his fulness,
 " sending forth (the Spirit), and saying, RECEIVE
 " THE HOLY GHOST."

The doctrine of receiving the Holy Spirit is undoubtedly mysterious. The operation cannot be made evident to the senses, like the tangible and visible objects of experimental philosophy: but is not the whole of the Christian religion mysterious? Is not natural religion mysterious? Is not the material world, all that we see around us, mysterious to poor mortals, born just to look about them and to die? UNIVERS ENIGMATIQUE, or, The whole World a Riddle, is the well-chosen title to a work of an ingenious foreigner *.

* Videmus nunc per speculum in ÆNIGMA.—We see now through a glass as by an ÆNIGMA. I Cor. xiii. 12.

SECTION XI.

The Opinions of Bishop Pearson and Doctor Scott, Author of the Christian Life, and a warm Advocate for natural Religion.

BISHOP Pearson is in the highest esteem as a divine. His book on the Creed is recommended to young students, in the course of their reading preparatory to holy orders, by tutors, by bishops' chaplains, and by bishops. It has been most accurately examined and universally approved by the most eminent theologues of our church, as an orthodox exposition of the Christian Creed. Let us hear him on the subject of the SPIRIT'S evidence, which now engages our attention.

“ As the increase and perfection, so the original or initiation of faith is from the Spirit of God, not only by an EXTERNAL PROPOSAL IN THE WORD, but by an INTERNAL ILLUMINATION in the soul, by which we are inclined to the obedience of faith, in assenting to those truths which unto a natural and carnal man are foolishness. And thus we affirm not only the revelation of the will of God, but also the illumination of the soul of man, to be part of the office of the Spirit of God *.”

Dr. Scott, an orthodox divine, a zealous teacher of morality, celebrated for a book intitled the Christian Life, says, “ That without the Holy Ghost we can do nothing; that he is the AUTHOR AND FINISHER of our faith, who worketh in us to will and do of his good pleasure. His first

* Bishop Pearson on the Creed, Art. 8.

“ office

“ office is the informing of our minds with the light
 “ of heavenly truth. Thus the apostle prays that
 “ the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father “ of glory, would give unto them the Spirit of “ wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of him,
 “ that THE EYES OF THEIR UNDERSTANDINGS “ being enlightened, they might know what is
 “ the hope of Christ’s calling *; and we are told,
 “ that it is by RECEIVING THE SPIRIT OF GOD,
 “ that we KNOW the things that are freely given us
 “ of God †.

“ Now this illumination of the Spirit is two“ fold: first, external, by that revelation which “ he hath given us of God’s mind and will in the “ holy scripture, and that miraculous evidence by “ which he sealed and attested it; for all scripture
 “ is given by inspiration of God ‡; or, as it is “ elsewhere expressed, was delivered by holy men,
 “ as they were moved by the Holy Ghost §; and all “ those miraculous testimonies we have to the “ truth and divinity of scripture are from the Holy “ Ghost, and, upon that account, are called the “ demonstration of the Spirit; so that all the light
 “ we receive from scripture, and ALL the evidence
 “ we have that that light is divine, we derive ori“ ginally from the Holy Spirit.

“ But besides this external illumination of the “ Holy Spirit, there is also an INTERNAL one,
 “ which consists in impressing that external light
 “ and evidence of scripture upon our understand- “ ings, whereby we are enabled more clearly to “ apprehend, and more effectually to believe it.

“ For though the divine Spirit doth not (at “ least in the ordinary course of his operation)

* Ephes. i. 17, 18.

‡ 2 Tim. iii. 16.

† 1 Cor. ii. 12.

§ 2 Pet. i. 21.

“ illuminate

“ illuminate our minds with any new truths, or “ new evidences of truth, but only presents to “ our minds those old and primitive truths and “ evidences which he at first revealed and gave to “ the world; yet there is NO DOUBT but he still “ continues not only to suggest them both to our “ minds, but to urge and repeat them with that “ importunity, and thereby to imprint them with “ that clearness and efficacy, as that if we do not,
 “ through a wicked prejudice against them, wilfully “ divert our minds from them to vain or sinful “ objects, we must unavoidably apprehend them
 “ far more distinctly, and assent to them far more “ cordially and effectually, than otherwise we “ should or COULD have done; for our minds are “ naturally so vain and stupid, so giddy, listless,
 “ and inadvertent, especially in spiritual things, “ which are abstract from common sense, as that,
 “ did not the Holy Spirit frequently present, im“ portunately urge, and thereby fix these on our “ minds, our KNOWLEDGE of them would be so con- “ fused, and our belief so wavering and unstable,
 “ as that they would never have any preventing “ influence on our WILLS and AFFECTIONS. So “ that our KNOWLEDGE and BELIEF of divine “ things, so far as they are saving and effectual
 “ to our renovation, are the fruits and products
 “ of this INTERNAL ILLUMINATION *.”

* This testimony is the more remarkable, as it was given when divines extolled morality and decried all mystery. Our Saviour and Socrates then ranked together, like Plutarch's parallels. Wurburton, following their fashion, expressly says, “ that Socrates, preaching “ moral virtue, and dying to bear witness to the unity of the god“ head, was made to the Grecian people wisdom and righteousness,
 “ NOT LESS than JESUS.”

SECTION XII.

Bishop Smalridge on the absolute Necessity of Grace.

I AM sensible that I have now sufficiently defended the doctrine of divine energy, by the authorities of men to whom the world has hitherto paid great respect and deference. I have fully exempted it from the charge of singularity, fanaticism, and folly. But, as the subject is of unspeakable importance, I have thought it proper to add a few more testimonies, in the hope, that some among the many opposers of the doctrine, may find reason to change their opinions, or at least think the matter not unworthy their most serious consideration. The following authority is that of Bishop Smalridge, Dean of Christ-church, a man very eminent as a classical scholar, and the intimate friend of Aldrich and Atterbury. Such writers will not be ranked by men of sense with the illiterate zealots of Methodism.

“ He who is not convinced of the absolute necessity of God’s grace to invigorate his obedience
 “ to the divine laws, must be a perfect stranger
 “ to himself, as well as to the word of God ; and “ must have been as careless an observer of what “ passes within his own breast, as of what is written in the holy scriptures. When one gives “ himself leisure to take a survey of his own faculties, and observe how dark sighted he is in “ the perception of divine truths ; with what reluctance he sometimes chuses what his understanding plainly represents to him as good, and “ refuses what his own conscience directly pronounces to be evil ; how apt his affections are
 “ to

“ to rebel against the dictates of his reason, and “ to hurry him another way than he knows he “ should, and, in his sober mind, very fain would “ go; when he sets before his thoughts the great “ variety of duties commanded, and of sins for-“ bidden, and the perverseness of his own de“ praved nature, which gives him an antipathy to “ those duties and a strong inclination to those “ sins; when he reflects on the power and cun“ ning of his spiritual enemies, always alluring
 “ him to sin, and seducing him from the practice “ of virtue; when he weighs with himself the “ necessity of practising every duty, and forsaking “ every kind of wickedness, in order to secure a “ good title to the promises of the gospel; when “ he takes a view of those particular obstacles “ which hinder him in the exercise of several “ graces, and of the strong temptations which “ prompt him to the commission of several sins;
 “ when he considers the aptness of human nature
 “ to grow weary of performing the same things, “ though in themselves never so pleasant, and its “ still greater disposition to grow faint, when the “ actions continually to be repeated are burden“ some to flesh and blood; when he compares the “ necessity of perseverance with the difficulty of “ it, the prevalence of things present and sensible “ with the weakness wherewith those objects “ affect us that are absent and spiritual; when, I “ say, a considering man puts all these things to“ gether, he cannot but be convinced, that nar- “ row is the path that leads unto everlasting life,
 “ and that without ILLUMINATION from the SPI-“ RIT OF GOD, he shall not be able rightly to “ discern it; that strait is the gate which opens an “ entry into heaven; and that he cannot, by the “ force of his own natural strength, without new “ power

“ power given him from above, and the secret influences of God’s Holy Spirit, adding force and energy to his own endeavours, force his way through it. Conscious, therefore, of his own weakness, he will acknowledge the necessity of God’s grace; and being ready to sink through his own natural weight, unless supported by foreign help, he will cry out with St. Peter, Save me, Lord, or ELSE I perish.

“ Some philosophers of old flattered the pride and vanity of men, by teaching them that they wanted nothing to make them virtuous, but only a firm and steady resolution of being so; that this resolution they themselves were masters of, and might exert at their own pleasure. They confidently boasted that their happiness was a thing wholly in their own power; that they need not ask of the gods to be virtuous, nor consequently to be happy, since they could be so without their aid or concurrence, or even in despite of them. The Pelagians afterwards raised their heresies upon the principles which these heathen philosophers had first broached; they engaged in the quarrel of depraved nature against divine grace: all our disorders they would have to be the effects not of sin but of nature; all our evil inclinations seemed to them capable of being subdued by our own unassisted reason; and they did not think the succour of any supernatural grace necessary either for the combating of vice, or the maintenance of their integrity and virtue. But the sober Christian hath learned from the scriptures to speak and to think more humbly of himself, and more becomingly and magnificently of God; we are there taught that we are not sufficient of ourselves to think, much less to do, any thing as of our- “ selves,

2

“ selves, but that our sufficiency is of God ; that it is “ God which worketh within us both to will and to “ do of his good pleasure ; that it is by the Spirit we “ must mortify the deeds of the body, if we would “ live ; that it is God who, by his Spirit, makes “ us perfect in every good work to do his will, work- “ ing in us that which is well-pleasing in his sight.
 “ The humble and devout Christian being thus “ satisfied of the necessity of God’s grace, both
 “ from his own experience and from the scrip“ tures, and being assured of the VITAL INFLU-“ ENCES of this spirit from the promises made to “ him in the gospel, will not be over-curious to “ inquire into the secret and inconceivable man“ ner of its operation. He will choose rather to “ FEEL these influences, than to understand or ex“ plain them, and will not doubt of that power, “ which, though he cannot give an account of as “ to the manner of its working, he plainly per“ ceives to be great and marvellous from its “ mighty and wonderful effects : for when, in “ reading the holy scriptures, he finds the veil of “ darkness removed from before his UNDERSTANDING ;
 “ when those clouds of ignorance that had over“ cast his mind, are presently dispersed ; when “ the doubts under which he had for some time “ laboured are on a sudden cleared ; when such “ pious thoughts as were wont to pass transiently
 “ are long dwelt upon, so as to leave behind them “ deep and lasting impressions ; when these are “ suggested to him without his seeking, and are “ urged and pressed upon him so importunately,
 “ that he cannot choose but listen unto them ;
 “ when, from a calm and serious consideration of “ the state of his own soul, the odiousness and “ danger of sin, the beauty and necessity of holi“ ness, he is led to make good and pious resolu“ tions

“ tions of serving God with greater purity for the “ time to come; when he finds a sudden impulse “ upon his spirits, rousing him up to the per“ formance of some important duty which he had “ before neglected; or an unexpected check, “ stopping him in the midst of his course, when “ he is rushing on blindly and impetuously to the “ commission of some heinous sin; when in his “ devotions he finds his attention fixed, his affections “ inflamed, and his heart melted within him; when,
 “ while the voice of God’s minister preaching the “ saving truths of the gospel sounds in his ears,
 “ he is sensible of an INWARD VOICE speaking with “ greater force and efficacy to his soul, to his “ understanding, and to his heart; when, under “ the pressure of any grievous affliction, he feels “ unexpected joy and comfort; when light rises
 “ up in the midst of darkness; when there is given “ unto him beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourn- “ ing, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness; “ upon all these and the like occasions he is “ sensible of the presence and aid of God’s Holy “ Spirit, whose grace alone is sufficient to all these “ purposes, and whose strength is thus made perfect
 “ in his weakness.

“ How the operation of God’s Holy Spirit is “ consistent with the freedom of our own wills;
 “ how far we are passive and how far active in “ those good thoughts, words, and works, which “ are wrought in us by the influence of this Holy “ Spirit, the practical Christian doth not much “ trouble himself to inquire. Whatsoever is good
 “ in him, that he devoutly ascribes not unto him“ self, but unto the grace of God which was “ afforded him; O Lord, not unto me, but unto “ thy name be the glory; or having by his former “ sins justly merited to be left destitute and for“ faken;

“ faken ; in the latter case he is as ready to make “ Daniel’s humble acknowledgment ; O Lord, “ righteousness belongeth unto thee, but unto me confu- “ sion of face. He will leave it to others to dispute
 “ about the nature, extent, and efficacy of this “ grace, and will make it his own chief labour to “ obtain, to cherish, and to improve it; he strives,
 “ according to the best of his judgment, to form “ right notions of its efficacy, but he is still more “ solicitous that no mistakes in his opinions about “ it may have any dangerous influence upon his “ practice. He cannot be very wrong in his no“ tions, whilst he believes that man’s will is nei“ ther so free, as without God’s grace to do good, “ nor so enslaved, as not to be at liberty either to “ concur with or to resist that grace : but whether “ these notions about a matter so intricate be ex“ actly right or not, he is fully assured that he “ cannot be mistaken in his measures of acting,
 “ if he exerts his own endeavours with as much “ vigour and earnestness, as if by them alone he “ were finally to stand or fall ; and, at the same “ time, implores God’s grace with as much fer-“ vency, as if that alone could support him :—if “ he neither relies so far on his own strength, as “ not humbly to acknowledge that it is God alone
 “ who works in him both to will and to do, nor so “ far depends on the grace of God to save him,
 “ as to forget that he is required to work out his “ own salvation :—if, lastly, at his approaches to “ the holy altar, he doth prepare himself for the “ reception of the blessed sacrament, with as much “ care, diligence, and scrupulosity, as if the be“ nefits he there expects did entirely depend upon “ the disposition he brings along with him, and “ his own fitness to communicate, and yet, at the “ same time, not trusting on his own imperfect

E

“ righteous-

“righteousness, but on God’s infinite mercy, he doth there, with faith, with humility, with reverence, address himself to that blessed SPIRIT, who is the giver of every good and perfect gift, that he may be filled with his grace and heavenly benediction.”

I cannot but hope that these opinions of a classical scholar, a man adorned with all elegant and polite learning, as well as with philosophy; a man, whose habits of life and social connexions tended to remove him from all contagion of vulgarenthiasm, will have great weight with the elegant and polite part of the world, in recommending the neglected or exploded doctrine of grace. No man needs blush to entertain the religious sentiments of Bishop Smalridge; nor can folly or fanaticism be reasonably imputed to divines like him, whose minds were enriched with all the stores of science, and polished with all the graces of ornamental literature.

SECTION XIII.

Human Learning highly useful, and to be pursued with all Diligence, but cannot, of itself, furnish EVIDENCES of Christianity completely satisfactory, like those which the Heart of the good Christian feels from the Divine Influence: with the Opinion of Doctor Isaac Watts.

LEARNING should be the handmaid of religion. She must not take upon her the office of a judge or arbitress of divine revelation. Her employment ployment in the church of God is highly honourable and useful, though subordinate. Let learning then be cultivated, and continue to flourish and abound, but let it be confined to its proper province. Religion indeed is the sun to the soul; the source of light and the cherisher of life. But because there is a sun, must there be no inferior lights? God has made the moon and the stars also, and pronounced that they are good.

The enemies to Christianity must not be suffered to triumph over it, by asserting that it is adverse to learning, and tends to introduce the ignorance of barbarism. Sound learning, under due regulations, contributes to soften the mind, and prepare it for the divine agency. A learned, virtuous, and religious man, whose religion is VITAL and truly Christian, is a superior being, even in this mortal state, and may be imagined, by us his fellow-creatures, to be little lower than the angels.

Nobody can hold learning, and the noble inventions of human ingenuity, in higher esteem than myself; I look up to them with affection and admiration. But after all, and however perfect and beautiful they may be, they are but HUMAN, the product of poor, short-lived, fallible mortals. Whatever comes from the FATHER OF LIGHTS, from him who made that MIND which is capable of learning and science, must deserve more attention and honour than can possibly be due to the most beautiful and stupendous works of human ingenuity. These are not to be slighted, but beloved, pursued, rewarded. But I am a MORTAL. Every moment is bringing me nearer to that period when the curtain shall fall, and all these things be hidden from my eyes. My first attention and warmest affection therefore ought, as I value my own happiness, to be fixed on things spiritual and eternal.

All arts, all sciences, must be secondary and instrumental to the attainment of DIVINE ILLUMINATION. I AM THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD, says Jesus Christ. Can any reasonable man rest satisfied without coming to the light after such a declaration? Will he be contented with the radiance of dim lights and false lights, when he is invited to approach the brilliant and the true?

Learning is necessary for the purposes of this life; it is an ornament and a defence. It is highly useful in religious investigation. It furnishes arguments to enforce morality, to persuade to all that is good and great, and to deter from folly and vice. But let it ever keep to its own office, which is certainly, in religious matters, ministerial. It can amuse; it can inform; but it cannot supply the summum bonum; it cannot raise fallen man to his original state. GRACE only can restore man to God's image. If learning could have done it, why were the heathens unrestored? are not the infidels often learned? and would not the advent of our Lord and Saviour have been superfluous, if learning could have repaired the ruins of the fall?

Few (as I have already said) in the mass of mankind are learned. They are perhaps as one to a million. What is to become of the millions then, if the gospel of Jesus Christ, by which alone they can live in the sweet tranquillity of a state of grace, and die with religious hope and confidence, cannot be received, with sufficient evidence, without deep learning, logical and metaphysical disputation? What is to prove it to them, who have neither books, leisure, or ability to study, if God himself do not teach them by his SPIRIT? Blessed be his name, he has taught them, and continues to teach them. It is among the learned chiefly that INFIDELITY prevails. She inhabits libraries, and walks abroad in academic groves, but is rarely seen in the cottage, in the field, or in the manufactory. The poor and the unlearned do in general believe in the gospel most firmly *. What is the evidence which convinces them? It is the witness of the Spirit; and thanks be to him who said my grace is sufficient for thee. "He that believeth on the Son of God hath this witness in himself."
to

The opinion of a man, which I shall now produce, like Dr. Isaac Watts, on the true nature of Christianity, is almost of itself decisive. He was not only a devout and zealous Christian, but a profound scholar, a natural philosopher, a logician, and a metaphysician. His life and conversation exhibited a pattern of every Christian virtue. Let us hear him.

"Every true Christian," says he, "has a sufficient argument and EVIDENCE to support his faith, without being able to prove the authority of any of the canonical writings. He may hold fast his religion, and be assured that it is divine, though he cannot bring any learned proof that the book that contains it is divine too; nay, though the book itself should even happen to be lost or destroyed: and this will appear, with open and easy conviction, by asking a few such questions as these:

* Whereas there are persons among the great and learned of whom it may be justly said, they are HOMINES MULTÆ RELIGIONIS, NULLIUS PENE PIETATIS; men of much religion, (strictness in morals and ceremonials;) yet of scarcely any piety or affectionate devotion.

“ Was not this same gospel preached with glorious success before the New Testament was written ?

“ Were not the same doctrines of salvation by Jesus Christ published to the world by the ministry of the apostles, and made effectual to convert thousands, before they set themselves to commit these doctrines to writing ?

“ And had not every sincere believer, every true convert, this blessed witness in himself, that Christianity was from God ?

“ Eight or ten years had passed away, after the ascension of Christ, before any part of the New Testament was written ; and what multitudes of Christian converts were born again by the preaching of the word, and raised to a divine and heavenly life, long ere this book was half finished or known, and that among the heathens as well as Jews. Great numbers of the Gentile world became holy believers, each of them having the epistle of Christ written in the heart, and bearing about within them a noble and convincing proof that this religion was divine ; and that without a written gospel, without epistles, and without a BIBLE.

“ In the first ages of Christianity, for several hundred years together, how few among the common people were able to read ? How few could get the possession or the use of a Bible, when all sacred as well as profane books were of necessity copied by writing ? How few of the populace, in any large town or city, could obtain or could use any small part of scripture, before the art of printing made the word of God so common ? And yet millions of these were “ regenerated, sanctified, and saved by the ministration of the gospel.
“ rege-

“ Be convinced then that Christianity has a more noble inward witness belonging to it than is derived from ink and paper, from precise letters and syllables. And though God, in his great wisdom and goodness, saw it necessary that the New Testament should be written, to preserve these holy doctrines uncorrupted through all ages, and though he has been pleased to be the invariable and authentic rule of our faith and practice, and made it a glorious instrument of instructing ministers and leading men to salvation in all these latter times; yet Christianity has a secret witness in the hearts of believers, that does not depend on their knowledge and proof of the authority of the scriptures, nor of any of the controversies that in latter ages have attended the several manuscript copies and different readings and translations of the Bible.

“ Now this is of admirable use and importance in the Christian life, upon several accounts. First, if we consider, how few poor unlearned Christians there are, who are capable of taking in the arguments, which are necessary to prove the divine authority of the sacred writings; and how few, even among the learned, can well adjust and determine many of the different readings or different translations of particular passages in scripture. Now a wise Christian does not build his faith or hope merely upon any one or two single texts, but upon the GENERAL SCOPE, sum, and substance of the gospel. By this he FEELS a spiritual life of peace and piety begun in him. And here lies his EVIDENCE that CHRISTIANITY IS DIVINE, and that these doctrines are from heaven, though a text or two

“ may be falsely written or wrong translated,
 “ and though a whole book or two may be hard
 “ to be proved authentic.

“ The learned well know what need there is of “ turning over the histories of ancient times, of “ the traditions and writings of the fathers, and “ all authors pious and profane; what need of “ critical skill in the holy languages and in ancient “ manuscripts; what a wide survey of various “ circumstances of fact, time, place, style, dic“ tion, is necessary to confirm one or another book
 “ or verse of the New Testament, and to answer
 “ the doubts of the scrupulous, and the bold ob“ jections of the infidel. Now how few of the “ common rank of Christians, whose hearts are “ inlaid with true faith in the Son of God, and “ with real holiness, have leisure, books, instruction, “ advantages, and judgment sufficient to make a “ thorough search into these matters, and to de“ termine, upon a just view of argument, that “ these books were written by the sacred authors “ whose names they bear, and that these authors
 “ were under an immediate inspiration in writing “ them. What a glorious advantage is it then
 “ to have such an INFALLIBLE TESTIMONY to the “ truth of the gospel wrought and written in the “ heart by renewing grace, as does not depend on “ this laborious, learned, and ARGUMENTATIVE “ EVIDENCE of the divine authority of the Bible,
 “ or of any particular book or verse in it!

“ Secondly, if we consider what bold assaults
 “ are sometimes made upon the faith of the un-“ learned Christian by the deists and unbelievers “ of our age, by disputing against the authority of “ the scripture, by ridiculing the strange narra“ tives and sublime doctrines of the Bible, by “ setting the seeming contradictions in a blas“ phemous

“ phemous light, and then demanding, “ How “ can you prize or how can you believe that this “ book is the word of God, or that the religion it “ teaches is divine ?” In such an hour of contest,
 “ how happy is the Christian that can say,
 “ Though I am not able to solve all the difficulties
 “ in the Bible, nor maintain the sacred authority
 “ of it against the cavils of wit and learning, yet
 “ I am well assured that the doctrines of this book
 “ are sacred, and the authority of them divine ;
 “ for when I heard and received them, they “ changed my nature, they subdued my sinful appe“ tites, they made a NEW CREATURE OF ME, and “ raised me from death to life ; they made me “ LOVE GOD above all things, and gave me the “ lively and well-grounded hope of his love.
 “ Therefore I cannot doubt but that the CHIEF “ PRINCIPLES of this book are divine, though I “ cannot so well prove that the very words and “ syllables of it are so too ; for it is the sense of “ scripture, and not the mere letters of it, on “ which I build my hope. What if the scripture “ should not be divine ? What if this gospel and “ the other epistles should not be written by in“ spiration ? What if these should be merely the “ words of men, and not the very word of God ?—
 “ Though I cannot recollect all the arguments “ that prove Matthew, Mark, and Luke to be “ divine historians, or Peter and Paul to be in“ spired writers ; yet the substance and chief sense
 “ of these gospels and their epistles must needs be “ divine ; FOR IT HAS BEGUN THE SPIRITUAL AND “ ETERNAL LIFE IN MY SOUL ; and THIS IS MY “ WITNESS, or rather the witness of the SPIRIT “ OF GOD within us, that CHRIST IS THE SON OF “ GOD, the SAVIOUR OF SINNERS, and the religion
 “ that I profess and practise is safe and divine.”

“ And though there are many and sufficient “ arguments drawn from criticism, history, and “ human learning to prove the sacred authority of “ the Bible, and such as may give abundant satisfac“ tion to an honest inquirer, and full satisfac“ tion that it is the word of God; yet THIS IS “ THE CHIEF EVIDENCE that the greatest part of “ Christians can ever attain of the divine original
 “ of the holy scripture itself, as well as the truth “ of the doctrines contained in it, namely, That “ they have found a holy and heavenly CHANGE passed “ upon them, by reading and hearing the propo“ sitions, the histories, the precepts, the promises,
 “ and the threatenings of this book; and thence “ they are wont to infer, that the God of truth
 “ would not attend a book, which was not agree“ able to his mind, with such glorious instances
 “ of his own POWER and GRACE.

“ I have dwelt the longer on shewing that the “ inward witness is such a witness to the truth of “ the Christian religion as does not depend on the “ exact truth of letters and syllables, nor on the cri“ tical knowledge of the copies of the Bible, nor
 “ on this old manuscript or the other new transla“ tion, because every manuscript and every trans“ lation has enough of the gospel to save souls by
 “ it, and make a man a Christian; and because I “ think this point of great importance in our age,
 “ which has taken so many steps to heathenism
 “ and infidelity; for this argument or EVIDENCE
 “ will defend a Christian in the profession of the “ true religion, though he may not have skill “ enough to defend his Bible.

“ Why do you believe in Jesus?” asks the un-“ believer. If you have this answer ready at “ hand, “ I HAVE FOUND THE EFFICACY AND “ POWER

“ POWER OF THE GOSPEL IN MY HEART ;” this
 “ will be sufficient to answer every cavil.

“ The words of St. Paul to the Corinthians have “ a reference to our present subject. *Ye are ma“ nifestly declared to be the epistle of Christ ministered
 “ by us ; written, not with INK, but with the SPI-“ RIT OF THE LIVING GOD ; not in tables of stone,
 “ but in fleshy tables of the heart..”

Thus far Dr. Watts, in his sermons on the inward Witness to Christianity, where the reader will find a great deal of truly evangelical instruction. For my own part, I cannot but think this good man approached as nearly to Christian perfection as any mortal ever did in this sublunary state ; and therefore I consider him as a better interpreter of the Christian doctrines than the most learned critics, who, proud of their reason and their learning, despised or neglected the very life and soul of Christianity, the living everlasting gospel ; the supernatural operation of DIVINE GRACE. And be it ever remembered, that Dr. WATTS was a man who cultivated his reason with particular care, who studied the abstrusest sciences, and was as well qualified to become a verbal critic, or a logical disputant on the scriptures, as the most learned among the doctors of the Sorbonne, or the greatest proficient in polemical divinity. I mention this circumstance for the consideration of those who insinuate that the doctrine of grace cannot be entertained but by ignorant, as well as fanatical persons ; by persons uninitiated in the mysteries of PHILOSOPHY.

* 2 Cor. iii. 2, 3.

SECTION XIV.

The Opinion of Dr. Lucas, the celebrated Author of an Enquiry after HAPPINESS, on the Evidence of Christianity arising from divine Communication.

THE writings of Dr. Lucas appear to me distinguished by the true spirit of Christianity. They were extremely popular at their first publication, and are still held in high esteem. The testimony of so good a man, so able and engaging a writer, must tend to persuade all who possess candour and Christian humility, that the doctrine of divine influence is the leading and most important tenet of Christianity.

“ There is,” says Dr. Lucas, “ no great need of acquired learning in order to true illumination. Our Saviour did not exact of his disciples, as a necessary preparation for his doctrine, the knowledge of tongues, the history of times or of nature; logic, metaphysics, or the like. These indeed may be serviceable to many excellent ends: they may be great accomplishments of the mind, great ornaments, and very engaging entertainments of life. They may be, finally, very excellent and necessary instruments of, or introductions to several professions and employments: but as to religious perfection and happiness, to these they can never be indispensably necessary.

“ A man may be excellently, habitually good, without more languages than one; he may be fully persuaded of those great truths, that will render him master of his passions and independent of the world; that will render him easy and “ useful

“ useful in this life, and glorious in another, “ though he be no logician nor metaphysician.

“ The qualifications previously necessary to illumination are two or three MORAL ONES, implied
 “ in that INFANT temper which our Saviour required in those who would be his disciples,— “ humility, impartiality, and a thirst and love of “ truth.”

“ There is a knowledge which, like the summit
 “ of Pisgah where Moses stood, shews us the land
 “ of Canaan, but does not bring us to it.

“ How does the power of darkness, at this moment, prevail amidst the light of the gospel?
 “ Are men ignorant? No: but their knowledge “ is not such as it ought to be; it is not the light
 “ of life.

“ The understanding does not always determine
 “ the will.

“ Though every honest man be not able to discover all the arguments on which his creed “ stands, he yet may discover ENOUGH; and what “ is more, he may have an INWARD, VITAL, SENSIBLE proof of them; he may FEEL the power,
 “ the charms of holiness, experience its congruity
 “ and loveliness to the human soul, so as that he “ shall have no doubts or scruples. But besides
 “ this, there is a VOICE WITHIN, a divine Teacher
 “ and Instructor. There are sudden suggestions, “ unexpected manifestations, extraordinary elevations of mind, which are never to be accounted “ for, but by a divine principle.

“ I see no reason why the Spirit may not vouchsafe us particular impulses, directions, and intimations upon extraordinary emergencies, where “ holy writ affords us no light, and human prudence is at a loss.

“ Extra-

“ Extraordinary natural parts are not necessary to illumination. The gospel takes no notice of them. Such is the beauty of holiness, that it requires rather a fine SENSIBILITY arising from purity of heart, than quickness of intellectual apprehension, to render us ENAMOURED of it.”

A truth which involves the present and eternal happiness of human beings, cannot be placed in too great a variety of lights, or too repeatedly enforced. “ He that soweth to the Spirit,” says St. Paul, “ shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting *.” When such is the harvest, every benevolent mind must wish to urge mankind, in this their seed-time, to sow to the Spirit. What is so important cannot be inculcated by too frequent repetition. I therefore quote authors which occur to me in the course of my reflections on the subject, whose opinions, though similar, may add weight to doctrines already advanced. Such is the above from Dr. Lucas, a most excellent divine, never charged with the least tendency to blameable enthusiasm. I wish my reader to pay particular attention to what he suggests on the INFANT TEMPER †, required by our Lord in his followers. “ Except,” says Jesus Christ, “ ye be converted,

* Galatians, vi. 8.

† There is no doubt but that grace is vouchsafed at a very early period of life. Some children appear to be truly angelic in their dispositions, innocent, loving, and lovely. “ There are some,” says Dr. Doddridge, “ on whom divine grace has wrought so early, that perhaps it is difficult to find a time from the first dawning of reason, when they did not appear in the main under the influences of it. These early dispositions must appear to be in a peculiar manner the work of God’s spirit, considering the strength of appetite and passion in children, and the weakness of reason. It would be extremely wrong to exempt such out of the class of the regenerate, and to confine the phrase to those who have been reclaimed from a vicious and immoral course.”

“ and

“ and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of God *.”—“ Verily I say unto you, Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a LITTLE CHILD, he shall not enter therein †.”

The amiable dispositions of infants must therefore be produced in the heart, before the religion of Christ can be received into it. But are such dispositions best produced, or can they be produced at all, by subtle disputations, by scholastic theology, by bringing forward objections in order to display ingenuity in answers, laboured indeed and sagacious, but, after all, unsatisfactory to many, and unintelligible to more ?

Yet this mode of recommending Christianity is the only one approved by some persons of high authority ; and there are those who would not venture to preach the doctrine of grace, the teaching of God and a spiritual understanding, lest they should be numbered with enthusiasts, and lose all chance of promotion and worldly esteem. This danger must be voluntarily incurred by all who would succeed in repelling the rapid advances of infidelity. Christianity flourished wonderfully while its genuine doctrines, the glad tidings of grace, were preached ; and it has been gradually declining, ever since it has become fashionable, in order to discountenance fanaticism, to recommend mere heathen morality as the essence of Christianity, and to make use of no other arguments to prove the truth of it, but such as an ingenious man, without the smallest particle of religion in his heart, may produce in abundance. Professional advocates, furnished with human arguments only and external evidence, appear to the true

* Mat. xviii. 3.

† Mark, x. 14.

true Christian, as well as to the unbeliever, like lawyers pleading for a fee, on that side of the question which they know to be wrong, or at least are not convinced is right. It is indeed certain that a dull and plodding scholar may make a wonderful display of erudition in defence of Christianity, without feeling a lively sense of it himself, or communicating it to his readers. His materials supply the adversaries with arms for fresh attacks, and at the same time fail in building an impregnable rampart round the citadel which he undertakes to defend. There is usually some weak place (for human learning and ingenuity cannot defend every part) at which the enemy enters; and, having once entered, he takes possession of the fortress, and uses the stores and ammunition against the very persons who collected them with so much labour.

Nothing of this kind can happen when recourse is had to the teaching of the Spirit. It overcomes the heart; it brings it to the lovely state of infantine innocence and simplicity; and renders him who, like St. Paul, was a persecutor of it, a warm friend and advocate.

It is certain that the argumentative mode of addressing unbelievers, and a reliance on external evidence, has hitherto failed. Many of the most learned and able men of modern times, who were capable of understanding the historical, logical, and metaphysical defences of Christianity, have read them without conviction, and laughed at their laborious imbecillity.

It is time to try another mode: and all who are sincere Christians will favour the experiment; for they would rather see men converted to the true religion, though they should become fervent, and zealous even to a degree of harmless enthusiasm, enthusiasm, than totally alienated from it, and enlisted under the partizans of infidelity.

If men of the world and men of *learning will not interpose to obstruct the divine energy, we shall see it produce its genuine effects in all their vigour and maturity, as well in the world of grace as of nature. A secret operation gives life and growth to the tree, and so will it to the human soul. "I am the vine, ye are the branches," says our Saviour: the branches will soon wither and decay, if the sap flows not to them from the vine.

SECTION XV.

Passages from a well-known Book of an anonymous Author, intitled Inward Testimony.

"REAL Christians find, that as soon as they " apply themselves to KNOW what is compre- " hensible, in the sacred scriptures, and to a sincere
 " endeavour to DO what is practicable, so soon a " FAITH in its INCOMPREHENSIBLE doctrines is " produced, and then is fulfilled, that he that doth
 " the will of God shall know of the doctrines whether
 " they be of God.

" The DIVINE SPIRIT concurs with the out-
 " ward revelation in changing a man's sceptical
 " disposition, and then he is fixed: otherwise he

* Nec philosophos se ostentent, sed satagant fieri THEODIDACTI.—
Neither let them ostentatiously put themselves off as philosophers; but labour to become men taught of God. GREG. IX. Ep. ad Univ. Paris.

" would

“ would be as ready as ever to embrace the first “ plausible argument against the gospel *.

“ We have some, who, by their mere notional
 “ knowledge of revelation, the outward testimony
 “ to Christianity, disbelieve the reality or necessity
 “ of any acquaintance with the inward testimony,
 “ by which the DIVINE SPIRIT produces a serious “ spiritual frame, fitting the soul to receive the “ sanctifying impressions of an outward revelation.
 “ They think that reading of sacred scripture, and “ forming from thence right notions of Christ-“ ianity, in order to TALK of it, with a going the “ round of common duties, and a not being guilty
 “ of common sins, is the whole of the Christian re“ ligion, and all the meetness that is necessary for “ heaven. A serious HEAVENLY FRAME, suitable “ to the true notion of revelation, has no place in “ them; they ridicule it in others, and name it “ affectation, rather than any real part of CHRIST-“ IANITY.

“ An ingenious mind may argue for God against “ the atheist; for CHRIST against the Socinian;
 “ and for the outward testimony of the SPIRIT of “ Christ against the deist; and he himself be no “ real Christian: but no person can well display
 “ this inward testimony of Christ in the soul,
 “ without the EXPERIENCE of it†.”

* “ Our light is like a candle, every wind of vain doctrine blows
 “ it out and makes the light tremulous; but the lights of heaven are “ fixed and bright and shine for ever.” BISHOP TAYLOR.

† To teach the HEARTS of others, the heart of the teacher must have had experience of the holy agency, or with respect to real edification in Christianity, his disciples will go empty away. Jam hic videte magnum sacramentum, Fratres. Magisteria forinsecus adjutoria quæ-dam sunt et admonitiones; CATHEDRAM IN CÆLO HABET QUI CORDA DOCET.—Here, brethren, you see a great and holy mystery.
Instruction from externals are great assistants, and afford much useful admonition; but he, who teacheth the heart, hath his seat, from which he gives his lessons in heaven.

AUGUST. Tr. 3. in 1 Joan.

SECTION XVI.

Dr. Townson's Opinions on the Evidence which is in this Book recommended as superior to all other.

THE author from whom the following testimony is taken, was honoured for the book in which it is inserted, with his doctor's degree, by diploma from Oxford, a proof that it has in it nothing fanatical; and I should be wanting in duty to my young reader, if I did not recommend to his perusal the admirable discourses of Dr. Townson on the four gospels. He has removed many difficulties in them, and may therefore remove some prejudices which tend to obstruct the reception of the sublime and consolatory doctrine of this volume.

“ If the word was enforced by miracles in the “ times only of its early publication, it has the “ standing support and EVIDENCE of another “ power, which is still as operative, where we will “ allow it, as ever. This is declared and pro“ mised in the following passage: Jesus answered “ them and said, My doctrine is not mine, but his
 “ that sent me. If any man will do his will, he shall “ know of the doctrine whether it be of God, or whe- “ ther I speak of myself.

“ The person who enters on the study of a “ science, of which he has only a general idea, “ must receive many things at first on the authority
 “ of his instructors. And surely there is no one,
 “ who, by his life and works, has such claim to “ trust and confidence in his words as the Author
 “ and Finisher of our faith. If then we really “ desire to know the certainty of his doctrine; if “ we have the courage to sacrifice meaner pursuits
 “ to

“ to the wisdom that is from above, and the felicity of attaining it ; we shall study the truth of his religion as he directs, by the PRACTICE OF ITS LAWS *. And this method, he assures us, will yield us the repose and comfort of firm persuasion. Continuing steadfast in such a course of discipline, we shall not seek after signs from heaven, nor ask to behold the blind receive their sight, the lame walk, the deaf hear, or the dead raised up. The healing efficacy and blessed influence of the gospel will sufficiently vouch for its truth and excellence.

“ The EVIDENCE which thus possesses the soul is not liable to be impaired by time, as might an impression once made on the senses ; but will shine more and more unto a perfect day. For the practice of religion, by purifying the heart, will raise and improve the understanding to conceive more clearly and judge more rightly of heavenly things and divine truths : the view and contemplation of which will return upon the heart the warmth of livelier hopes and more vigorous incitements to obedience ; and effectual obedience will FEEL and testify that it is the finger of God.

“ For is nature able, by its own efficiency, to clear the eyes of the mind ; to rectify the will ; to regulate the affections ; to raise the soul to its noblest object, in love and adoration of God ; to employ it steadily in its best and happiest exercise, justice and charity to man ; to detach its desires from the pleasures, profits, and honours

* And to practise his laws we shall be enabled by what is called by Theologians “ COMMON GRACE.” “ Those divine influences, which leave the mind short of faith and sincere obedience, may be called COMMON GRACE. These introduce SPECIAL.”

DODDRIDGE.

“ of

“ of the world; to exalt its views to heavenly things; to render the whole life godly, just, and sober? He, who impartially examines his own moral abilities by the pure and searching light of the gospel, must discern their defects and weakness in every part; and when he well considers the tenor and spirit of this gospel, must acknowledge that he is not of himself sufficient for the attainments to which it calls and conducts its faithful votary.

“ What then is it that hath taken him by the hand, and leads him on in this rising path of virtue and holiness; that prevents his steps from sliding; or if his foot hath slipped, raises him again; that keeps him steady in the right way; or, if at any time he hath wandered out of it, recalls him to it; that strengthens him to resist temptations, to endure toils, and so continue patiently in well-doing; that, as he advances, opens to his faith a still brightening view of the heavenly Jerusalem, through the gloom which our earthly state hangs upon death and futurity; and animates him to live and walk by this faith?

“ If these are exertions beyond the sphere of mere human activity, the question, whence such improvement of soul and spirit and life proceeds, will admit of an easy and clear answer. It is God who blesses our earnest petitions that we may do his will, and our sincere endeavours to do it, with the GRACE OF HIS HOLY SPIRIT; who worketh in us both to will and to do of his good pleasure; and thus verifies and fulfils the promises, made by Christ to those who ask in his name, of succour and strength from on high. Christ therefore is his beloved Son, by whom we are redeemed, and in whom we are accepted. The religion which “ he

“ he hath taught us, so worthy of God in the “ theory, and so favoured by him in the practice “ of its laws, proves its heavenly origin by the “ fruit it produces; and brings its divinity home
 “ to the breast of the devout professor by EXPE-“ RIENCE of its power unto salvation.

“ It is natural to conclude, that he who has
 “ this conviction of its certainty will be desirous
 “ of persuading others to the belief and practice
 “ of it; and will be of an apt and fit disposition
 “ to instruct them in it.” Thus it appears that Dr. Townson, like Dr. Jeremy Taylor, thinks that the teaching of the Spirit is the best instruction for the clergy, and “ that the scholars of the university “ may become under this discipline most learned
 “ and most useful *.”

There are scarcely any recent divines, whose opinions ought to have more weight than those of Dr. Townson. He lived, as he wrote, according to the true gospel. He is universally esteemed by the most learned and judicious theologists of the present day; and his opinions alone carry with them sufficient authority to justify me fully in recommending that evidence of the gospel truth which arises from divine influence, consequent on obedience to its precepts. An orthodox life, I am convinced, is the best preparative to the entertainment of orthodox opinions; and I rejoice to find such men as Townson enforcing the doctrine, “ that if any man will do the will of Christ, he “ shall KNOW of the doctrine whether it be of “ God.” He does not refer us to systematical or philosophical works, but to the teaching of the Holy Ghost, for the attainment of this knowledge;
 a knowledge, compared to which all other is to

* Vide Sect. vi.

man,

man, condemned as he is shortly to die, but puerile amusement, a house of cards, a bubble blown up into the air, and displaying bright but evanescent colours in a momentary sunshine.

SECTION XVII.

Dr. Doddridge on the Doctrine of Divine Influence.

IT has been suggested, rather illiberally, that it was wrong to insert the testimonies of dissenting ministers, like those of Watts and Doddridge. I leave the world to judge; only taking the liberty to observe that these two eminent divines have ever been held in the highest esteem by the most respectable clergy of the church, and that either of them would have done honour to an archiepiscopal mitre. Dr. Doddridge's Lectures are, in my opinion, the very best introductory book which can be put into the hands of a young student (a real student) in divinity. Watts and Doddridge were a par nobile who did honour to human nature, and whom any denomination of Christians might have been proud to acknowledge.

"Any degree of divine influence," says Doddridge, "on the mind, inclining it to believe in Christ and to practise virtue, is called GRACE. "All those who do indeed believe in Christ, and "in the main practise virtue, are to ascribe it not "merely or chiefly to their own wisdom and "goodness, but to the special operation of divine "grace upon their souls, as the original cause of "it. None can deny, that God has such an ac"cess

“ cels to the minds of men that he can work upon “ them in what manner he pleases : and there is “ great reason to believe, that his secret influence “ on the mind gives a turn to many of the most “ important events relating to particular persons “ and societies *, as it is evident many of the “ public revolutions, mentioned in the Old Testa“ ment, are ascribed to this cause †. Though the “ mind of man be not invincibly determined by “ motives, yet in matters of great importance it is “ not determined without them : and it is reason“ able to believe, that where a person goes through “ those difficulties which attend faith and obedi“ ence, he must have a very lively view of the “ great engagements to them, and probably, upon
 “ the whole, a more lively view than another,
 “ who, in the same circumstances, in all other “ respects acts in a different manner. Whatever “ instruments are made use of as the means of “ making such powerful impressions on the mind,
 “ the efficacy of them is to be ascribed to the con- “ tinual agency of the FIRST CAUSE. The prevalence “ of virtue and piety in the church is to be ascribed
 “ to God, as the great original Author, even upon
 “ the principles of natural religion. Good men
 “ in scripture, who appear best to have understood
 “ the nature of God, and his conduct towards “ men, and who wrote under the influence and “ inspiration of his Spirit, frequently offer up such “ petitions to God, as shew that they believed the “ reality and importance of his gracious agency
 “ upon the heart to promote piety and virtue ‡.

* Prov. xxi. 1.

† Ezra, i. 2. Religion of Nature delineated, p. 105—107.

‡ Psal. li. 10—12. xxxix. 4. xc. 12. cxix. 12. 18. 27. 33—37.
 73. 80. 133. 1 Chron. xxix. 18, 19. Eph. i. 16, &c. Col. i.
 9—11, &c. fin.

“ God

“ God promises to produce such a change in the “ hearts of those to whom the other valuable “ blessings of his word are promised, as plainly “ implies that the alteration made in their temper
 “ and character is to be looked upon as his “ work*.

“ The scripture expressly declares, in many “ places, that the work of faith in the soul is to “ be ascribed to God, and describes the change
 “ made in a man's heart, when it becomes truly “ religious, in such language as must lead the “ mind to some strength superior to our own by “ which it is effected†. The increase of Christians “ in faith and piety, is spoken of as the work of “ God; which must more strongly imply that the “ first beginnings of it are to be ascribed to him‡.
 “ The scripture does expressly assert the absolute “ necessity of such divine influences on the mind,
 “ in order to faith and holiness, and speaks of “ God's giving them to one, while he withholds “ them from another, as the great reason of the “ difference to be found in the characters of dif“ ferent men in this important respect§.

* Deut. xxx. 6. Psal. cx. 3. Jer. xxxi. 33. xxxii. 39, 40.
 Ezek. xi. 19, 20. xxxvi. 26, 27. Compare Heb. viii. 8—13.

† John, i. 13. iii. 3, 5, 6. Acts, xi. 18. xvi. 14. 2 Cor. iii. 3.
 Eph. i. 19, 20. ii. 1. 10. iv. 24. Phil. i. 29. Col. i. 11, 12.
 ii. 12, 13. Vid. James, i. 18. 2 Tim. ii. 25. To this catalogue we scruple not to add Eph. ii. 8: though some have objected that τὸ οὐκ cannot refer to πίστεως; since the like change of genders is often to be found in the New Testament; compare Acts, xxiv. 16.
 xxvi. 17. Phil. i. 28. 1 John, ii. 8. Gal. iii. 16. iv. 19.
 Matth. vi. ult. xxviii. 19. Rom. ii. 14. Elsner's Observ. vol. i.
 p. 128. Raphael. Observ. ex Herod. in Matth. xxviii. 19. Glasii Op. l. iii. Tract ii. de pr. Can. xvi. p. 524—526.

‡ Psal. cxix. 32. Phil. i. 6. ii. 13. 1 Cor. vii. 25. iii. 7.
 iv. 7. xv. 10. 2 Cor. v. 5. Heb. xiii. 20, 21. 1 Pet. v. 10.
 Jude, ver. 24, 25.

§ Deut. xxix. 4. Matth. xi. 25, 26. John, vi. 44, 45, 46.
 xii. 39, 40. Rom. ix. 18—23.

“ It appears probable from the light of nature,
 “ and certain from the word of God, that FAITH
 “ and repentance are ultimately to be ascribed to “ the work of special grace upon the hearts of “ men *. As to the manner in which divine “ grace operates upon the mind, considering how “ little it is we know of the nature and constitu“ tion of our own souls, and of the frame of na“ ture around us, it is no wonder that it should “ be unaccountable to us†. Perhaps it may often “ be, by impelling the animal spirits or nerves, in “ such a manner as is proper to excite certain “ ideas in the mind with a degree of vivacity, “ which they would not otherwise have had : by “ this means various passions are excited ; but the “ great motives addressed to gratitude and love “ seem generally, if not always, to operate upon “ the will more powerfully than any other, which “ many divines have therefore chosen to express
 “ by the phrase of delectatio victrix ‡.”

* Lime-street Lect. vol. ii. p. 242—245. Tillotson's Works, vol. ii. p. 80, 81. Limb. Theol. l. iv. c. 14. § 4. 21. Brandt's Hist. of the Ref. vol. ii. p. 75. Doddridge on Regen. Sermon vii. p. 221—233. Jortin's Six Dissertations, No. 1. Warburton's Doctrine of Grace. Fost. Sermons, vol. ii. No. 5. præf. p. 104, 105.

† John, iii. 8.

‡ This delectatio victrix is the pleasant sentiment which good men have ever felt when acting in obedience to God, and with a good conscience. JANSENIUS eam Christi gratiam . . . non aliud esse vult, quam cœlestem quandam atque ineffabilem suavitatem, seu spiritualem delectationem, quâ voluntas prævenitur et flectitur ad volendum faciendumque quicquid Deus eam velle et facere constituerit.

LE BLANC Theses.

Compare Deut. xxx. 6. Psal. cxix. 16. 20. 32. 47. 48. 97. 103. Psal. xix. 10, 11. Rom. vii. 22. 1 John, iv. 18, 19. Rom. v. 5. Le Blanc's Thes. p. 527, § 53. Burn. Life of Roch. p. 43—51. Barclay's Apol. p. 148. Burnet on Art, p. 120. Whitby Comment. vol. ii. p. 289, 290. Scougal's Works, p. 6—10. Seed's Serm. vol. i. p. 291. Ridley on the Spirit, p. 210. King's Origin of Evil, p. 71. 376—380, fourth edition.

SECTION XVIII.

The Opinions of Mr. Locke and Mr. Addison.

IT will be difficult to prove that any of the modern worshippers of their own reason possess understandings better illuminated than those of the great ornaments of our country, Locke and Addison; and they have left on record their opinion on the reality and necessity of supernatural assistance. It is evident, I think, that Mr. Locke's understanding and temper were very little inclined to admit any thing fanatical. He appears to have weighed well, in the balance of reason, whatever he advanced; and therefore his testimony may be supposed to have authority on the minds of those who, in forming their religious principles, lay claim to pre-eminent RATIONALITY.

Mr. Addison is universally allowed to have united in himself the scholar, the philosopher, and the gentleman. His liberal and polished mind always appeared to me peculiarly formed for theological subjects, and he treats them in a most pleasing and persuasive manner. Let us hear both these great men on our present subject.

“To these I must,” says Mr. Locke, “add one “advantage more we have by Jesus Christ, and “that is, the promise of ASSISTANCE. If we do
 “what we can, he will give us his SPIRIT to help “us to do what, and how we should. It will be “idle for us, who know not how our own spirits “move and act us, to ask in what manner the “Spirit of God shall work upon us. The wisdom that accompanies that spirit knows better “than we how we are made, and how to work “upon

“ upon us. If a wise man knows how to prevail
 “ on his child, to bring him to what he desires,
 “ can we suspect that the spirit and wisdom of “ God fail in it, though we perceive or compre“ hend not the ways of his operation? Christ has “ promised it, who is faithful and just, and we “ cannot doubt of the performance. It is not re“ quisite, on this occasion, for the inhancing of “ this benefit, to enlarge on the frailty of minds,
 “ and weakness of our constitutions; how liable
 “ to mistakes, how apt to go astray, and how easily
 “ to be turned out of the paths of virtue. If any “ one needs go beyond himself and the testimony “ of his own conscience on this point; if he feels
 “ not his own errors and passions always tempting
 “ him, and often prevailing against the strict rules “ of his duty, he need but look abroad into any “ age of the world to be convinced. To a man “ under the difficulties of his nature, beset with “ temptations, and hedged in with prevailing cus“ tom, it is no small encouragement to set himself “ seriously on the courses of virtue and practice
 “ of true religion, that he is from a sure hand
 “ and an almighty arm promised assistance to sup“ port and carry him through.”

Let us hear also Mr. Addison, a lay divine of the first order.

“ We who have this veil of flesh standing be“ tween us and the world of spirits, must be con“ tent to know that the Spirit of God is present “ with us, by the effects which he produceth in “ us. Our outward senses are too gross to appre“ hend him; we may however taste and see how “ gracious he is, by his influence upon our minds,
 “ by those virtuous thoughts which he awakens
 “ in us, by those secret comforts and refreshments “ which he conveys into our souls, and by those “ ravishing joys and inward satisfactions which “ are perpetually springing up and diffusing them“ selves among all the thoughts of good men. He “ is lodged in our very essence, and is as a soul “ within the soul, to irradiate its understanding,

 “ rectify its will, purify its passions, and enliven
 “ all the powers of man. How happy therefore “ is an intellectual being, who, by prayer and “ meditation, by virtue and good works, opens
 “ this communication between God and his own “ soul ! Though the whole creation frowns upon “ him, and all nature looks black about him, he “ has his light and support within him, that are “ able to cheer his mind, and bear him up in the “ midst of all those horrors which encompass him.
 “ He knows that his helper is at hand, and is “ always nearer to him than any thing else can “ be, which is capable of annoying or terrifying “ him. In the midst of calumny or contempt, he “ attends to that being who whispers better things “ within his soul, and whom he looks upon as “ his defender, his glory, and the lifter-up of “ his head. In his deepest solitude and retire“ ment he knows that he is in company with the “ greatest of Beings ; and perceives within himself
 “ such REAL SENSATIONS of his presence, as are more “ delightful than any thing that can be met with “ in the conversation of his creatures. Even in “ the hour of death he considers the pains of his “ dissolution to be nothing else but the breaking “ down of that partition which stands betwixt his “ soul and the sight of that Being, who is always “ present with him, and is about to manifest itself
 “ to him in fulness of joy.

“ If we would be thus happy, and thus sensible
 “ of our Maker’s presence, from the secret effects “ of his mercy and goodness, we must keep such

“ a watch over all our thoughts, that, in the lan“ guage of the scripture, his soul may have pleasure
 “ in us. We must take care not to grieve his “ Holy Spirit, and endeavour to make the medi“ tations of our hearts always acceptable in his “ sight, that he may delight thus to reside and “ dwell in us. The light of nature could direct “ Seneca to this doctrine in a very remarkable “ passage among his epistles : ‘ Sacer inest in no- “ bis spiritus bonorum malorumque custos et observator,
 “ et quemadmodum nos illum tractamus, ita et ille
 “ nos.’ There is a Holy Spirit residing in us,
 “ who watches and observes both good and evil
 “ men, and will treat us after the same manner “ that we treat him. But I shall conclude this “ discourse with those more emphatical words in “ divine revelation : “ If a man love me, he will keep “ my words ; and my Father will love him, and we “ will come and make our abode with him.”

I cannot help observing, that after the four and bitter potions administered by the metaphysical sceptres of recent times, the pages of the Spectator seem to afford the heart a delicious aliment or a balsamic medicine. If men did not too much resemble the prodigal in the gospel, they would surely rejoice to feed on manna at their father's table, rather than on husks with swine.

SECTION XIX.

The Opinion of Soame Jenyns on the fundamental Principles of Christianity.

MR. JENYNS was not a professional divine, but he was a man of a very acute intellect, and had doubtless examined the writings of the fashionable Deists with attention. He had lived much in the world, and probably been attached to its prevailing modes of thinking; yet after all, he concluded his studies with publicly professing his belief of Christianity. It is impossible, consistently with common sense, to suspect such a man of ignorant fanaticism. He read with great powers of discernment the written gospels; and he was convinced that the doctrine of divine influence was clearly and indisputably taught in them. It is humbly hoped that the gay and fashionable world will attend to the opinions of one of their own fraternity.

“ If Christianity,” he observes in his Disquisitions, “ is to be learned out of the New Testament, and words have any meaning affixed to them, the fundamental principles of it are these :

“ That mankind came into this world in a depraved and fallen condition; that they are placed here for a while, to give them an opportunity to work out their salvation; that is, by a virtuous and pious life to purge off that guilt and depravity, and recover their lost state of happiness and innocence in a future life; that this they are unable to perform without the

F 4

“ GRACE

“ GRACE AND ASSISTANCE OF GOD; and that,
 “ after their best endeavours; they cannot hope
 “ for pardon from their own merits, but only
 “ from the merits of Christ, and the atonement
 “ made for their transgressions by his sufferings
 “ and death. This is clearly the sum and substance of the Christian dispensation; and so adverse is it to all the principles of human reason, that if brought before her tribunal, it must inevitably be condemned. If we give no credit to its divine authority, any attempt to reconcile them is useless; and, if we believe it, presumptuous in the highest degree. To prove the REASONABLENESS* of a revelation, is in fact to destroy it; because a revelation implies information of something which reason cannot discover, and therefore must be different from its deductions, or it would be no revelation.”

The opinion of a professed wit and man of fashion may have weight with those who are prejudiced against professional divines. It has been doubted by many whether Mr. Jenyns was a sincere Christian. I am inclined to believe that he was sincere. And as, in recommending Christianity, it is right to become all things to all men, that we may save some, his testimony is admitted in this place, though his lively manner of writing throws an air of levity on subjects, which, from their im-

* The great Mr. Locke is supposed to have done harm by his treatise “ on the Reasonableness of Christianity.” I will not assert so much; but I must observe, that as Mr. Locke maintained the doctrine of divine influence in that very treatise, it is clear that he did not think it unreasonable. Yet an appeal to REASON only on matters of faith is as absurd as an appeal of sounds to the eye, or of colours to the ear. That matters of faith are above human comprehension, is a pretty good argument that they did not originate in human contrivance.

portant

portant nature, must always be considered as grave by all the partakers of mortality, who think justly and feel acutely *.

SECTION XX.

The Opinion of Bishop Horsley on the prevalent Neglect of teaching the peculiar DOCTRINES of Christianity, under the Idea that Moral Duties constitute the Whole or the better Part of it. Among the peculiar Doctrines is evidently included that of Grace, which the Methodists inculcate, (as the Bishop intimates,) not erroneously.

BISHOP Horsley has proved himself a mathematician and philosopher of the first rank, as well as a divine. All his works display singular vigour of intellect. He cannot be suspected of weak superstition or wild fanaticism. To the honour of Christianity, the editor of Newton, as well as Newton himself, is a firm supporter of its most mysterious doctrines. I desire the reader to weigh well the words of this able divine, as they were delivered in a charge to his clergy.

* Many, I find, continue to be sceptical on the subject of Mr. Jenyns's sincerity. It is impossible to penetrate the heart; but I ask what proof, or shadow of proof, appears in his pleasing little book on the Evidences of Christianity, that the author was insincere? I take the liberty of mentioning that the present Bishop of London, who was intimately acquainted with Mr. Jenyns, told me that he thought him an unfeigned believer.

But whether sincere or not, it appears clearly from this quotation, that he understood the gospel on the subject of the Holy Spirit's agency, in the same manner as I have done. His testimony, as that of a man of great sagacity, is valuable.

“ A maxim has been introduced,” says he,
 “ that the laity, the more illiterate especially, have “ little concern with the mysteries of revealed re“ ligion, provided they be attentive to its duties ;
 “ whence it hath seemed a safe and certain con“ clusion, that it is more the office of a Christian “ teacher to press the practice of religion upon “ the consciences of his hearers, than to inculcate
 “ and assert its doctrines.

“ Again, a dread of the pernicious tendency of “ some extravagant opinions, which persons, more
 “ to be esteemed for the warmth of their piety “ than the soundness of their judgment, have “ grafted in modern times, upon the doctrine of “ justification by faith, as it is stated in the 11th, “ 12th, and 13th of the Articles of our Church, “ (which, however, is no private tenet of the “ church of England, but the common doctrine
 “ of all the first reformers, not to say that it is the “ very corner-stone of the whole system of redemption,)
 “ a dread of the pernicious tendency of those ex“ travagant opinions, which seem to emancipate
 “ the believer from the authority of all moral “ law, hath given general credit to another maxim ;
 “ which I never hear without extreme concern
 “ from the lips of a divine, either from the pulpit
 “ or in familiar conversation ; namely, that prac“ tical religion and morality are one and the same “ thing : that moral duties constitute the whole,
 “ or by far the better part, of practical Christi“ anity.

“ Both these maxims are erroneous. Both, so “ far as they are received, have a pernicious in“ fluence over the ministry of the word. The “ first most absurdly separates practice from the “ motives of practice. The second, adopting that “ separation, reduces practical Christianity to “ heathen

“ heathen virtue ; and the two, taken together, “ have much contributed to divest our sermons of “ the genuine spirit and savour of Christianity, and “ to reduce them to mere moral essays : in which “ moral duties are enforced, not, as indeed they “ might be to good purpose, by scriptural motives,
 “ but by such arguments as no where appear to so “ much advantage as in the writings of the hea“ then moralists, and are quite out of their place
 “ in a pulpit. The rules delivered may be ob“ served to vary according to the temperament of “ the teacher. But the system chiefly in request, “ with those who seem the most in earnest in this “ strain of preaching, is the strict but impracti“ cable, unsocial, sullen moral of the Stoics. Thus,
 “ under the influence of these two pernicious
 “ maxims, it too often happens that we lose sight
 “ of that which is our proper office, to publish “ the word of reconciliation, to propound the “ terms of peace and pardon to the penitent, and “ we make no other use of the high commission “ that we bear, than to come abroad one day in “ the seven, dressed in solemn looks, and in the “ external garb of holiness, to be the apes of “ Epictetus.

“ The first of the two, which excludes the laity
 “ from all concern with the doctrinal part of re“ ligion, and directs the preacher to let the doc“ trine take its chance, and to turn the whole at“ tention of his hearers to practice, must tacitly “ assume for its foundation (for it can stand upon
 “ no other foundation) this complex proposition :
 “ Not only that the practice of religious duties is “ a far more excellent thing in the life of man,
 “ far more ornamental of the Christian profession, “ than any knowledge of the doctrine without the “ practice ; but, moreover, that men may be “ brought to the practice of religion without previous instruction in its doctrines ; or in other words, that faith and practice are, in their nature, separable things. Now the former branch of this double assumption, that virtue is a more excellent thing in human life than knowledge, is unquestionably true, and a truth of great importance, which cannot be too frequently or too earnestly inculcated. But the second branch of the assumption, that faith and practice are separable things, is a gross mistake, or rather a manifest contradiction. Practical holiness is the end ; faith is the means : and to suppose faith and practice separable, is to suppose the end attainable without the use of means. The direct contrary is the truth. The practice of religion will always thrive, in proportion as its doctrines are generally understood and firmly received ; and the practice will degenerate and decay, in proportion as the doctrine is misunderstood or neglected. It is true, therefore, that it is the great duty of a preacher of the gospel to press the practice of its precepts upon the consciences of men ; but then it is equally true, that it is his duty to enforce this practice in a particular way ; namely, by inculcating its doctrines. The motives which the revealed doctrines furnish, are the only motives he has to do with, and the only motives by which religious duty can be effectually enforced.

“ I am aware, that it has been very much the fashion, to suppose a great want of capacity in the common people, to be carried any great length in religious knowledge, more than in the abstruse sciences. That the world and all things in it had a maker ; that the Maker of the world made man, and gave him the life which he now “ enjoys ;

“ enjoys ; that he who first gave life, can at any “ time restore it ; that he can punish, in a future “ life, crimes which he suffers to be committed “ with impunity in this ; some of these first prin“ ciples of religion the vulgar, it is supposed,
“ may be brought to comprehend. But the pe- “ culiar doctrines of revelation, the trinity of per“ sons in the undivided Godhead ; the incarna“ tion of the second person ; the expiation of sin
“ by the Redeemer’s sufferings and death ; the ef“ ficacy of his intercession ; THE MYSTERIOUS “ COMMERCE OF THE BELIEVER’S SOUL WITH THE “ DIVINE SPIRIT ; these things are supposed to be “ far above their reach. If this were really the “ case, the condition of man would indeed be “ miserable, and the proffer of mercy, in the “ gospel, little better than a mockery of their “ woe ; for the consequence would be, that the “ common people could never be carried beyond
“ the first principles of what is called natural re“ ligion. Of the efficacy of natural religion, as “ a rule of action, the world has had the long ex“ perience of 1600 years. For so much was the “ interval between the institution of the Mosaic “ church, and the publication of the gospel.
“ During that interval, certainly, if not from an “ earlier period, natural religion was left to try
“ its powers on the heathen world. The result “ of the experiment is, that its powers are of no “ avail. Among the vulgar, natural religion never “ produced any effect at all ; among the learned, “ much of it is to be found in their writings, little “ in their lives. But if this natural religion, a “ thing of no practical efficacy, as experiment
“ has demonstrated, be the utmost of religion “ which the common people can receive, then is “ our preaching vain, Christ died in vain, and “ man

“ man must still perish. Blessed be God! the “ case is far otherwise. As we have, on the one “ side, experimental proof of the insignificance “ of what is called natural religion; so, on the “ other, in the success of the first preachers of “ Christianity we have an experimental proof of “ the sufficiency of revealed religion to those very “ ends in which natural religion failed. In their “ success we have experimental proof that there “ is nothing in the great mystery of godliness, “ which the vulgar, more than the learned, want “ capacity to apprehend, since, upon the first “ preaching of the gospel, the illiterate, the scorn “ of pharisaical pride, who knew not the law, and “ were therefore deemed accursed, were the first
 “ to understand, and to embrace the Christian “ doctrine.*

“ An OVER-ABUNDANT zeal to check the phrenzy
 “ of the METHODISTS, first introduced that un“ scriptural language which confounds religion and “ morality.*The great crime and folly of the “ Methodists consists not so much in beterodoxy, as “ in fanaticism; not in PERVERSE DOCTRINE, but “ rather in a disorderly zeal for the propagation “ of the TRUTH.*Reason, till she has been “ taught by the lively oracles of God, knows no“ thing of the spiritual life, and the food brought “ down from heaven for its sustenance. By mere “ ARGUMENT addressed to their REASON, no convic“ tion could be wrought in the minds of the common “ people, of the very first principles of religion.”

The learned bishop here asserts, that “ our ser“ mons are often divested of the genuine spirit and “ savour of Christianity.” If so, it is no wonder that our churches are forsaken and our religion despised. It is a truth, to which I have frequently been an eye-witness, that spacious churches in London,

London, capable of containing thousands, are almost empty, notwithstanding the preachers everywhere inculcate excellent morality*. Wherever indeed there appears, what the common people call, an EVANGELICAL preacher, the churches are so crowded, that it is difficult to gain admittance. The multitude hunger and thirst for the spiritual food; yet evangelical preaching is discouraged by many in high places, because it is said to favour of enthusiasm and to delude the vulgar†. But it is this

* “One may more justly complain of some sermons in our days, than the father of old did of Tully’s works, that there is not a word of Christianity in them. Tully’s Offices and Seneca’s Epistles serve many instead of the Bible.

“It is a rare thing to find passages of scripture in some sermons; as if the preachers were ashamed of it.”

“There are some that preach out of PUFFENDORF more than the scriptures.” Dr. Scot says, “Moral goodness is the main of Christianity, and thereby we do what God himself would do if he were in our place.” See EDWARDS’S Preacher, page 79. See also SCOT’S Christian Life, part ii. vol. i. chap. i.

† ERASMUS was a consummate judge of preaching and preachers. Let us hear him:

Doctos puto quotquot crediderunt EVANGELIO. Cur enim indocti debeant appellari, qui, (ut nihil aliud,) e symbolo apostolorum didicerunt illam ULTRAMUNDANAM PHILOSOPHIAM, quam non Pythagoras aut Plato, sed ipse DEI FILIUS tradidit hominibus; qui a CHRISTO docti sunt, quâ viâ ad quem felicitatis scopum tendere. Ubique est VERA SANCTITAS, ibi est MAGNA PHILOSOPHIA minimeque vulgaris eruditio. Sed tamen inter hos egregiè doctos excellunt, quibus peculiari SPIRITUS munificentia datum est, ut ad iustitiam erudiant multos; quibus DOMINUS dedit labia, non in quibus illa gentium rudis flexanima, sed in quibus ex UNCTIONE SPIRITUS diffusa est GRATIA CŒLESTIS.—LEARNED I deem all those who have believed the Gospel. For why should they be called unlearned who (supposing they have learned nothing else) have learned from the Apostles’ creed that ultramundane Philosophy, which neither a Pythagoras nor a Plato, but the Son of God himself, delivered to mankind; who have learned from Christ the end they should pursue and the way to pursue it? Wherever true Holiness exists, there also exists great Philosophy, and no common kind and degree of erudition. But yet among persons thus excellently learned, those are pre-eminent, to whom it is given by the Spirit’s bountiful mercy, to instruct many in the ways of righteousness; on whom God has bestowed lips, not adorned with the this preaching alone which will preserve Christianity among us, and cause it to be considered as any thing better than a state-engine for the depression of the people.

SECTION XXI.

The Church of England teaches the true Doctrine of Grace.

IN recommending to MORE GENERAL NOTICE the doctrine of grace, I make no pretensions to a new discovery. It is obviously the doctrine of the Gospel; it is obviously the doctrine of the Church; it is fully acknowledged by all who sincerely use that form of prayer, which is established by the authority not only of those who composed it, but of those who ever since its composition, even to the present day, are voluntarily guided by it, in the performance of divine service.

Bishop Gibson, who was certainly a zealous friend to the Church of England, has collected a number of passages from the liturgy, to shew that the meretricious arts of heathen eloquence, but richly furnished, by the unction of the Spirit, with heavenly Grace. ERASM. Eccles.

Those eminent divines Perker, Tillotson, Goodman, Whichcot, Scot, Claget preached down the sublime doctrines of true Christianity, by preaching up what they called natural religion and reason, in compliance with a COURT, and certain politicians and men of fashion who wished to decry the Presbyterians and other sectaries, whose political principles seemed adverse to their interest and ambition. I forbear specifying recent writers who appear to have trod in their steps, from motives not very religious, though, in a worldly sense, very wise.

the

the public offices of the Church are duly regardful of the gifts and graces of the Holy Spirit.

“ In the daily service, we pray to God to grant us true repentance and his Holy Spirit—to replenish the King with the grace of his Holy Spirit—to endue the Royal Family with his Holy Spirit—to send down upon our Bishops and Curates, and all Congregations committed to their charge, the healthful Spirit of his grace—that the Catholic Church may be guided and governed by his good Spirit, and that the fellowship of the Holy Ghost may be ever with us.

“ In the Litany we pray that God will *illuminate all Bishops, Priests, and Deacons with the TRUE KNOWLEDGE AND UNDERSTANDING OF HIS WORD—will endue us with the grace of his Holy Spirit, and that we may all bring forth the fruits of the Spirit.

“ In the Collects we pray that God will grant us the true circumcision of the Spirit, that our hearts and all our members being mortified from all worldly and carnal lusts, we may in all things obey his blessed will—that God will send his Holy Ghost, and pour into our hearts the most excellent gift of charity—that we may ever obey the godly motions of the Spirit in righteousness and true holiness—that by his holy inspiration we may think those things that be good, and by his merciful guiding may perform the same—that God will not leave us comfortless, but send to us his Holy Ghost to comfort us—that by his Spirit we may have a right

* Yet a high dignitary who, when in an inferior station, had read this passage, in the parish churches, a thousand times, speaks doubtingly of the ILLUMINATING power of the Holy Spirit. He seemed to be a disciple of EDMUND LAW, who led the way to liberal thinking at Cambridge.

“ judgment

“ judgment in all things, and evermore rejoice
 “ in his holy comfort—that his Holy Spirit may “ in all things direct and rule our hearts—that he “ will cleanse the thoughts of our hearts by the “ inspiration of his Holy Spirit.

“ In the office for Confirmation, we pray for “ the persons to be confirmed, that God will “ strengthen them with the Holy Ghost the Com“ forter, and daily increase in them his manifold “ gifts of grace, the spirit of wisdom and under“ standing, the spirit of counsel and ghostly
 “ strength, the spirit of knowledge and true god-“ liness—that he will fill them with the spirit of “ his holy fear—and that they may daily increase
 “ in his Holy Spirit more and more.”

The articles of original sin, free-will, and justification evince that the Church of England maintains the doctrine of light, sanctity, and life, derivable from the operation of the Holy Ghost. And there is a curious passage in a book, written by Archbishop Cranmer and the Committee of Divines, intitled Necessary Erudition for a Christian Man, which fully declares, that, “ besides many “ other evils that came by the fall of man, the “ high power of man’s reason and freedom of will “ were wounded and corrupted; and all men “ thereby brought into such blindness and infirm“ ity, that they cannot eschew sin, except they be “ illuminated and made free by an especial grace, “ that is to say, by a supernatural help and working
 “ of the Holy Ghost *.”

There can be no doubt, in the mind of an impartial inquirer, that the church teaches the doctrine of supernatural influence in plain and strong

* This book was published by order of Henry VIII. 1543, approved by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal and the Lower House of Parliament, and dedicated by the King to all his faithful subjects.

terms;

terms; and that it derives it from the holy scriptures. "For it is by the Spirit of wisdom that
 "our understandings are enlightened: it is by the "Spirit that we are rooted and grounded in love,
 "and that our souls are purified in obeying the "truth; it is by the Spirit that we are called
 "unto liberty; for where the Spirit of the Lord
 "is, there is liberty; in a word, it is by the "Spirit that all our infirmities are helped, and "that we are strengthened with might in the inner man*."

"Without-me," says Christ, "ye can do nothing." Our blessed Saviour opened the understandings of his disciples, that they might understand the scriptures. The Lord opened the heart of Lydia, that she attended to the things that were spoken of Paul. The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned. That the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of Glory, may give unto you the spirit of wisdom and revelation, in the knowledge of him, that ye may know what is the hope of his calling, and what the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints. For God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ.—No man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost.—For by grace ye are saved through faith; and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God†.

* Eph. i. 17. 1 Pet. 22. Gal. v. 13. 2 Cor. iii. 17. Rom. viii. 26. Ephes. iii. 16, 17.

† John, xv. 5. Acts, xvi. 14. Ephes. i. 17, 18. 1 Cor. xii. 3. Luke, xxiv. 45. 1 Cor. ii. 14. 2 Cor. iv. 6.

If

If there be meaning in words, these passages evince the reality and necessity of internal illumination from the great fountain of light. And what says the homily of the church? "In reading of God's word, he most profiteth, not always that is most ready in turning of the book, or in saying of it without the book, but he that is most turned into it, that is, most inspired with the Holy Ghost." In the same homily, a passage from Chrysostom is quoted to the following purport: "Man's human and worldly wisdom and science is not needful to the understanding of scripture, but the revelation of the Holy Ghost, who inspireth the true meaning unto them that with humility and diligence do seek therefore."

In the Ordination Office, the bishop says to the candidates for priest's orders, "Ye cannot have a mind or will thereto of yourselves, for the will and ability is given of God alone. Therefore ye ought and have need to pray earnestly for the HOLY SPIRIT. You will continually pray to God the Father, by the mediation of our only Saviour Jesus Christ, for the heavenly assistance of the Holy Ghost."

A great number of citations might be brought to prove that the doctrine of grace or supernatural assistance * is established by the Church of England in

* At the Church of England ordination of every priest, the following hymn is appointed to be sung. I quote it not for the poetry but the doctrine.

Come, Holy Ghost, eternal God,
 Proceeding from above,
 Both from the Father and the Son,
 The God of Peace and Love;
 Visit our minds, and into us
 Thy heavenly grace inspire. . . .

Thou

in exact conformity to the scriptures*; but it is not necessary to insist on a truth which is evident to every one who reads the Common-prayer Book, the Articles, the Homilies, and compares them with the Gospels and Epistles.

SECTION XXII.

On the Means of obtaining the Evidence of Christianity, afforded by the Holy Spirit.

I NOW come to the most important part of my subject. I have produced, as I intended, the weighty authority of great and good men, most eminent divines, to countenance and support me in recommending to the people, above all other evidence, the evidence of the Holy Ghost, to the truth of Christianity. After the suffrages of such men in favour of this sublime doctrine, no man can justly call it heterodox or improperly enthusi-

Thou art the very Comforter
In all woe and distress;
The heavenly gift of God most high,
Which no tongue can express.
The fountain and the lively spring
Of joy celestial;
The fire so bright, the love so clear,
And UNCTION spiritual.
O, Holy Ghost, into our wills
Send down thy heavenly LIGHT, &c.

Vide Ordination Service in the folio Liturgies used by the minister in the churches.

* It never can be consistent with the character of an honest man solemnly to subscribe to the doctrines of grace, seriously to pray in the church for divine influence, and then to teach and preach against the whole doctrine.

astical.

astical. I could indeed cite many other most respectable authorities; but I have already far exceeded the just limits of quotation. It now remains to point out more expressly (though much in this way has been incidentally done already) the means of obtaining this evidence.

FAITH IS THE GIFT OF GOD*. To the Giver only it belongs to prescribe the means of obtaining his bounty. He has prescribed the WRITTEN WORD and PRAYER. Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the WORD OF GOD†. But the whole tenor of the Gospel proves, that the WRITTEN WORD has not efficacy of itself to convince our understandings, nor reform our hearts; to produce either faith in God or repentance from dead works, without the aid of the Holy Ghost.

Now the aid of the Holy Ghost is promised to PRAYER: "If ye," says our Saviour, "being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall God give the HOLY SPIRIT to them that ask him?"

The Holy Spirit, it appears from this passage, is the best gift which the best, wisest, and most powerful of Beings can bestow on man, and he has promised it those who ask it with faith and humility:—an easy condition of obtaining the greatest comfort of which the heart is capable, together with full evidence of the truth of Christianity.

But do the philosophical inquirers into the truth of Christianity seek its evidence in this manner?

* Eph. ii. 8. To you it is GIVEN, says St. Paul, to believe on Christ. Phil. i. 29. To some it was given to understand the mysteries of the kingdom, and to others it was not given. Mat. xiii. 11.

† Rom. x. 7. We must earnestly pray in the words of St. Paul, that the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of Glory, would give unto us the SPIRIT of wisdom and revelation; the eyes of our understanding being enlightened. Eph. i. 17.

Do they lift up their hearts in supplication? It appears rather that they trust to their own power, than to the power of God. They take down their folios, they have recourse to their logic, their metaphysics, nay even their *mathematics, and examine the mere historical and external evidence with the eyes of literary criticism and Pagan philosophy. The unbelievers, on the other hand, do the same; and, as far as wit and subtle reasoning goes, there are many who think that a Tindal and a Collins were more than equal to a Clarke and a Coneybeare. There is no doubt but that infidelity is diffused by theological controversy, whenever the illumination of the Spirit, the SANCTITY of the Gospel, is entirely laid aside, and the whole cause left to the decision of human wit and invention.

He that would be a Christian indeed, and not merely a disputant or talker about Christianity, must seek better evidence than man, short-sighted as he is with the most improved sagacity, ignorant as he is with the deepest learning, can by any means afford. He must, in the words of the Psalmist†, “open his mouth and draw in the Spirit.” The Holy Ghost will give him the SPIRIT OF SUPPLICATION‡, which will breathe out in prayer, and inhale from him who first inspired the divine particles, fresh supplies of grace. He must continue instant in prayer. This will preserve his mind in a state fit to receive the Holy Visitant from on high,

* See Ditton, Andrew Baxter, Huet, Dr. Daniel Scott, and many others, who undertake to demonstrate, almost geometrically, the truth of the gospel, the resurrection, or the doctrine of the Trinity. We should not be taught by St. Paul's example to pray for illumination, unless it were likely to be given to us as the consequence of servent and faithful prayer, accompanied with study or meditation.

† Psal. cxix. 131.

‡ Zach. xii. 10.

§ Divinæ particulam auræ.

HOR.

who

who brings with him balsam for the heart, and light for the understanding. The result will be full evidence of Christianity, full confidence in Jesus Christ, joy and peace on earth, and a lively hope of salvation. What a sunshine must a mind in such a state enjoy: how different from the gloominess of the sceptic or unbeliever; how superior to the coldness of the mere disputant in scholastic or sophistical divinity! Such a man may not take degrees in an university and be clothed in scarlet, yet may he be crowned with celestial glory, and have his name recorded in the book of life. If he turn many to righteousness, he may shine as a light in the firmament for ever.

With respect to the efficacy of PRAYER in bringing down the assistance, the ILLUMINATION of the Holy Ghost, not merely in teaching doctrinal notions, but in directing the actual conduct of life, let us hear the declaration of LORD CHIEF JUSTICE HALE, whose example I select, because he was a layman, a man deeply conversant in the business of the world, a great lawyer, and therefore may contribute to prove, that they who value themselves on their worldly sagacity, and frequently consider the affairs of religion as trifles, compared with the contests for property and the concerns of jurisprudence, need not, in the most active life and most exalted stations, be ashamed of the Gospel of Christ.

“ I can call,” says he, “ my OWN EXPERIENCE
 “ to witness, that even in the external actions, “ occurrences, and incidents of my whole life, I “ was never disappointed of the best guidance and “ direction, when in humility, and a sense of de“ ficiency, and diffidence of my own ability to “ direct myself, or to grapple with the difficulties
 “ of

“ of my life, I have implored the secret guidance of “ the divine Wisdom and Providence *.”

SECTION XXIII.

Temperance necessary to the Reception and Continuance of the Holy Spirit in the Heart, and consequently to the Evidence of Christianity afforded by Divine Illumination.

THE Apostle says, Be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess; but be filled with the SPIRIT †.
The word ασωτια in the original, here rendered excess, corresponds with the Latin prodigalitas, which in the Roman law characterised the spendthrift and debauchee, incapable, from his vices, of managing his own affairs, and therefore placed by the prætor under the guardianship of trustees, without whose concurrence he could perform no legal act ‡. He was considered as an infant and an idiot. The words of the Apostle may then be thus paraphrased. “ Be not intemperate in wine,

* One can hardly doubt but that Socrates was favoured with supernatural assistance, which was his DÆMON; and, if he was, he probably obtained it by prayer.

Η ο βίος Σωκράτους μέγας εὐχης.—The life of Socrates was full of prayer.

Η οὐκ οὐτο εὐχέτο Σωκράτης, ὥπως αὐτῷ χρημάτων γένητο, ἢ οὕτως ἀρχὴν ἀθηναίων; ἀλλ' εὐχέτο τοῖς θεοῖς ἀρετὴν ψυχῆς, ἢ πνευματικὴν βίον, ἢ ζῶν ἀμεμπτόν, ἢ εὐέλπιδιν θάνατον.—Do you think that Socrates prayed that wealth might fall to his lot, or that he might possess power over the Athenians, and gratify his ambition? No; he prayed the Gods for virtue of the mind, tranquillity, a blameless life, and death full of hope.

MAXIM. TYR. Diss. 30.

† Eph. v. 18.

‡ See Dr. Powel's Sermon on the text.

G

“ because

“ because intemperance will destroy your reason,
 “ and degrade you to a state of infantine imbecility, “ without infantine innocence; but be filled with “ the SPIRIT; that is, let your reason be exalted, “ purified, clarified to the highest state by the “ co-operation of the divine reason, which cannot “ be, if you destroy the natural faculties which “ God has given you, by drunkenness and glut“ tony.”

I think it evident, from this passage, as well as from the conclusions of reason and experience, that all excess tends to exclude the radiance of grace. The mental eye is weakened by it, and cannot bear the celestial lustre *.

That great master of reasoning, Aristotle, maintained that pleasures are corruptive of principles (φθαρτικαὶ τῶν ἀρχῶν); and many of the ancients were of opinion, that vice disqualified for philosophical pursuits, where the object was merely terrestrial and human, by raising a mist round the understanding, such as the rays of truth could not penetrate. It was for this cause that one of them maintained “ juvenis non est idoneus mor- “ alis philosophiæ auditor;” that, though youth is most in want of moral instruction, yet, from the violence of its passions, and its usual immersion in sensuality, it was the least qualified to comprehend, he does not say to adopt or follow, but even to understand, the doctrines of moral philosophy.

* Ὡς περ ἐφθάλμου λημνόντι, ὃ οὐ κεκαθαρμένῳ, τὰ σφοδρὰ φαίνεται εἶναι οὐκ ὁνόντα· οὕτω δὲ τῇ ψυχῇ μὴ τὴν ἀρίστην κεκτημένῃ, τὴν ἀληθείαν νοητρίσασθαι καλῶς. As it is impossible for an eye, labouring under a malady which causes a defluxion, to see clearly any very bright and brilliant object, till the impurity is removed; so it is for the mind, unpossessed of virtue, to reflect the beautiful image of truth.

HIEROCLES, in Præf. ad Pythag.

One of our own philosophers*, who in many respects equalled the ancients, justly observes,
 " That anger, impatience, admiration of persons,
 " or a pusillanimous over-estimation of them, de-
 " fire of victory more than of truth, too close an
 " attention to the things of this world, as riches,
 " power, dignities, IMMERSION OF THE MIND
 " INTO THE BODY, and the slaking of that noble and
 " divine fire† of the soul by intemperance and
 " luxury; all these are very great enemies to all " manner of knowledge, as well natural as di" vine."

I therefore earnestly recommend it to every serious man, who wishes to be convinced of Christianity, to consider it in the morning‡, before either the cares of the world, or the fumes of that intemperance§ which conviviality sometimes occasions, blunt the feelings of the heart, and spread a film over the visual nerve of the mental eye||. Devotion, pouring forth early in the morning her orisons of humility and gratitude, would greatly conduce to the happiness of men and the reformation of society. According to the present system of luxuri-

* Dr. Henry More.

† Ignis ille vigor.—That energy resembling fire.

‡ Those that seek me early (mane) shall find me.

PROVERBS, viii.

§ Si præceptor, homo, gravatur homini disciplinam humanam committere, puta dialecticam aut arithmeticam, somnolento, oscitanti, aut erapulâ gravato; quanto magis SAPIENTIA CÆLESTIS dedignabitur loqui voluptatum hujus mundi amore temulentis, cælestium rerum neglectu, nauseantibus?—If a preceptor, a mere man, hesitates to give merely human instruction; for instance, lectures on Logic or Arithmetic, to a pupil who is drowsy, who yawns, or who is sick with the intemperance of yesterday; how much more will the heavenly Wisdom disdain to speak with those who are drunk with the pleasures of the world, and who, from a total neglect of heavenly things, sicken at the mention of them?

ERASMUS.

|| Verum hæc impransus.—These let him learn before the fumes of indigestion cloud over the faculties.

HOR.

ous indolence, many rise from their pillow at noon, with no other apparent view than to trifle away an hour or two, till the time comes for plunging again into the intemperance of the banquet, continued with little intermission till the midnight bell, when tired nature sinks from mere weariness to repose, without inclination or ability for reflection.

SECTION XXIV.

On improving AFFLICTIONS duly as a Means of Grace and Belief in the Gospel.—Humility requisite to the Reception of divine Influence.

A CELEBRATED divine*, on his recovery from a severe fit of sickness, is reported to have said, “I have learned, under this sickness, to KNOW SIN AND GOD.” He had studied divinity, during many years, with great attention; he had prayed and preached with great ardour; yet he acknowledges, that till the affliction of sickness visited him, he was unacquainted with those important subjects, SIN AND GOD; subjects which he had so frequently considered in private, and discoursed upon before an admiring audience.

It is good for me that I have been afflicted, said one, who had sinned egregiously in his prosperous days, and who was rendered wise by adversity.

Afflictions, if suffered to have their perfect work, will certainly become the means of grace, cause belief in the consolatory gospel, and ultimately lead to salvation. The wandering mind returns, like the prodigal son, when under the pressure of distress, to the bosom of its father. The kind father goes forth to meet it on its return, and the interview happily terminates in perfect love and reconciliation.

* Oecolampadius.

More have been convinced of the truth of Christianity by a severe illness, a great loss, a disappointment*, or the death of one whom the soul loved, than by all the defences, proofs, and apologies which have ever been produced in the most celebrated schools of theology. The heart was opened, and rendered soft and susceptible by sorrow, and the dew of divine grace enabled to find its way to the latent seeds of Christian virtue.

Such being the beneficial effect of afflictions, it is much to be lamented, that many will not suffer them to operate favourably on their dispositions, and thus counteract, by the good they may ulti-

* Le moment de la GRACE, c'est une humiliation. qui Dieu vous envoie, et qui vous éloigne du monde, parceque vous n'y pouvez plus paroître avec bonheur. C'est la disgrâce d'un maître à qui une lâche complaisance vous faisoit en mille rencontres sacrifier les intérêts de votre conscience; le changement d'un ami dont le commerce trop fréquent vous entraînoit dans le vice, et vous y entretenoit. C'est une perte de biens, une maladie, un chagrin domestique ou étranger; ce sont des souffrances; tout, HORS DIEU, devient AMER; on ne trouve plus de consolation que dans lui; Et, rebuté des choses humaines, on commence à GOUTER LES CHOSES DU CIEL.—The season of Grace is, when God sends you some humiliating affliction, which withdraws you from the world, because you can no longer appear in it with honour. It is some disgrace thrown upon you by a master, to whom a base obsequiousness led you, in a thousand struggles, to sacrifice the interests of your conscience. It is the alienation of a friend, your connection with whom too often led you into the snares of vice, and kept you there. It is the loss of property, it is a disease, an uneasiness either domestic or from without; it is a state of suffering, when every thing, but God, becomes bitter to a man, when he finds no consolation but within himself; and when, disgusted with the vanity and vexation of human affairs, he begins to taste the sweetness of things heavenly. BRETONNEAU.

mately produce, the pain which they immediately inflict. They fly from solitude, they banish reflection. They drink the cup of intoxication, or seek the no less inebriating draft of dissipating pleasure. Thus they lose one of the most favourable opportunities of receiving those divine impressions which would give them COMFORT under their afflictions, such as the world cannot give; and afford them such conviction as would render them Christians indeed, and lead to all those beneficial consequences of faith, which are plainly represented in the scripture.

HUMILITY, a virtue to be produced in some men solely by affliction, UNITES A MAN TO ALL OTHER MEN. Pride would fain build a high wall of separation between itself and all the human race, especially all in the lower ranks of society. But humility sees a brother in a beggar and a negro; a brother born of woman and subject to many infirmities and sufferings, and travelling to the grave. HUMILITY is therefore the source of CHARITY and every other Christian virtue. No wonder, indeed, since God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace to the HUMBLE.

SECTION XXV.

On Devotion—a Means, as well as an Effect, of Grace—no sincere Religion can subsist without it.

MANY theologists, who have written in defence of Christianity with the acuteness of an Aristotle, and the acrimony of a Juvenal, against all sorts of infidels and heretics, seem to have forgotten gotten one very material part of religion—that which consists of devotional sentiment, and the fervors of a sincere piety. Some of them appear to reprobate, and hold it in abhorrence. They inveigh against it as enthusiasm; they laugh at it as the cant of hypocrisy. Such men have the coldness of Bishop Butler, without the ingenuity; the contentious spirit of Dr. Bentley, without the wit or erudition.

True religion cannot exist without a considerable degree of devotion. On what is true religion founded but on LOVE—the love of God, and the love of our neighbour? And with respect to the love of God, what says our Saviour? Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength. No language can more expressly and emphatically describe the ardour of devotion. Out of the heart the mouth speaketh. If the heart feels the love of God, in the degree which our Saviour requires, the language of prayer and thanksgiving will be always glowing, and, on extraordinary occasions, even rapturous.

The effectual FERVENT prayer of a righteous man availeth much; if it be not fervent, it cannot be sincere, and therefore cannot be expected to avail. Love must add wings to prayer, to waft it to the throne of grace.

“ Man has a principle of love implanted in his nature, a magnetism of passion *,” by which he constantly attaches himself to that which appears to him good and beautiful; and what so good, what so beautiful, as the archetype and model of all excellence? Shall he conceive the image, and not be charmed with its loveliness?

* Norris.

Worship or adoration implies lively affection. If it be cold, it is a mere mockery, a formal compliance with customs for the sake of decency. It is a lip-service, of which knaves, hypocrites, and infidels are capable, and which they render for the sake of temporal advantage.

Will any man condemn the ardour which the scriptures themselves exhibit? Must they not be allowed to afford a model for imitation? And are they written in the cold, dull style of an academical professor, lecturing in the schools of divinity? No; they are written in warm, animated, metaphorical, and poetical language; not with the precision of the schoolmen; not with the dryness of system-makers; but with florid, rhetorical, impassioned appeals to the feelings and imagination. What are the PSALMS, but ebullitions of passion, sorrow, joy, love, and gratitude?

The truth is, that the most important subject which can be considered by man, must, if considered with seriousness and sincerity, excite a warm interest. The fire of devotion may not, indeed, be equably supported, because such equability is not consistent with the constitution of human nature; but it will, for the most part, burn with a clear and steady flame, and will certainly, at no time, and in no circumstances, be utterly extinguished.

Where the heart is deeply interested, there will be eagerness and agitation. Suppose a man, who speaks, in the church, of the Holy Ghost, and other most important religious subjects, with perfect sang froid, repairing to the Stock-exchange, and just going to make a purchase. The price fluctuates. Observe how he listens to his broker's reports. His cheeks redden, and his eyes sparkle. Here he is in earnest. Nature betrays his emotion.

It

It is not uncharitable to conclude that his heart is literally with his treasure; and that with respect to the riches of divine grace, he values them little; and, like Gallo, careth for none of these things. View him again, at a great man's levee, and see with what awe he eyes a patron. His attention approaches to adoration. He is tremblingly solicitous to please, and would undergo any painful restraint, rather than give the slightest offence. The world will not condemn, but applaud his anxiety; yet, if he is earnest and fervent, when his interest is infinitely greater, in securing the tranquillity of his mind, under all the changes and chances of life, he is despised as an enthusiast, a bigot, a fool, or a madman.

With what warmth and impetuosity do some men speak and write on political subjects! We all remember a very ingenious and honourable, but ambitious man, (on the brink of the grave, and with a heart bleeding with the forest laceration for the loss of a son,) DECLAIMING with a degree of ardour in favour of war, which, if it had appeared in defence of the gospel of peace, would have been called by the world extremely FANATICAL.

A man of sense and true goodness will certainly take care not to make an ostentation of his devotional feelings; but at the same time he will be aware of suppressing, in his endeavour to moderate and conceal them.

He will never forget, that yonder sun, which emits light over the universe, diffuses, at the same time, a genial heat, that enlivens and cherishes all nature.

SECTION XXVI.

On Divine Attraction.*

SHALL we believe our Saviour himself, or some poor mortal, who has learned a little Greek, Latin, or Hebrew, and upon the strength of his scanty knowledge of those languages †, and a little verbal criticism, picked up in the schools of an university, assumes the pen of a Controversialist, and denies the evident meaning of words plainly and emphatically spoken by Jesus Christ? Our Saviour says, in language particularly direct, “No man can come unto me, except the Father, which hath sent me, DRAW HIM.”

Fauftus Regienſis, Wolzogenius, Brenius, Slichtingius, Sykes, Whitby, Clarke, and many others, endeavour to explain away the meaning of the word DRAW (ελκυση), because they have taken a ſide in the party polemics of Theology, againſt the doctrine of Divine Grace.

But what have we to do with Fauſtus, Wolzogenius, Slichtingius, and the reſt, when we have before us the words of JESUS CHRIST? By them it appears that there is an ATTRACTION in the ſpiritual world, as well as the natural; and that the

* The ſoi-diſant Rationaliſts do not like this title; but I muſt beg leave to inform them that it is taken from Dr. Iſaac Barrow. See the preceding quotation from that great divine.

† “There are two ways of embracing Chriſtianity; the one is as a SINNER, the other as a SCHOLAR.” Some ſcholars take up the New Teſtament to write their obſervations upon it in the ſame ſpirit as they take up Anacreon, Ovid, Catullus, Martial, Petronius, SHAKESPEARE, COWLEY; and ſometimes comment on St. Paul with the ſame arrogance and ſelf-conceit as on Sir John Falſtaffe and Dame Quickly.

Spirit

Spirit of God, a benign philanthropic Spirit, unites itself to the soul of man, and communicates to it comfort, sanctity, and illumination.

Men do not controvert the received systems of natural philosophy. They believe in the attraction of gravitation, cohesion, magnetism, and electricity. But in this there is no visible agency, no sensible efflux, influx, or impulse. Yet they believe it, and certainly with reason; but why should they think that God acts thus on matter, comparatively vile, and leaves MIND uninfluenced? Mind, that pure, etherial essence, which must be said to approach in its nature to Divinity, (if man can conceive any thing of divine,) and which has an in-born tendency to assimilate with its like.

God, we are told in scripture, is love. But love always attaches itself to its object. It is not compatible with love to be selfish and solitary. It delights in assimilation. The spirit of that God who is love, still unites itself with man, for whom it has already shewn so much affectionate regard, in the creation and redemption. It could not be consistent with the love and mercy of God to man, to leave him entirely, for ages, without any intercourse, any light, any communication, but a written WORD, in a language unknown, unread by many, and which, without Divine interposition, might be corrupted by the wickedness of man, or lost by his negligence. God's Spirit, acting upon the soul of man, at this hour and for ever, is a LIVING, ENERGETIC, AND EVERLASTING GOSPEL. The promise of God's assistance by his Spirit, (as St. Peter assured the first converts to Christianity,) was unto them, and unto their children, and to all that WERE AFAR OFF *, their successors to the remotest ages, even to as many as the Lord their God should call.

* Acts, ii. 39.

Man must be ATTRACTED to God by the spirit of love in the Divine nature, or else he ceases to be in the Christian system; and what may be the consequence to the soul in its aberration, is known only to him who knoweth all things. But surely every thinking mortal will gladly follow the Divine attraction, since it will draw him from this low vale, where sin and sorrow abound, up to the realms of bliss eternal; and afford him, during his earthly pilgrimage, the sweetest solace.

The human soul assimilating with the Divine, is the drop of water gravitating to the ocean, from which it was originally separated; and cohering with it as soon as it comes within the sphere of its attraction; it is the child clinging to the bosom of its parent; it is the wandering, weary exile hastening with joy to his native home. Let us endeavour to cherish an inclination for re-union; let us follow all the known means of accomplishing it, and it will be finally and completely effected by the Holy Ghost, the Spirit of Love *.

* Let us hear a Heathen philosopher speak on the union between God and good men.

Inter bonos viros ac Deum amicitia est, conciliante virtute; amicitiam dico? etiam necessitudo et similitudo.—Between good men and God there subsists a friendship, under the mediation of virtue; a friendship do I say? It is more. It is an intimate union and resemblance, SENeca.

SECTION XXVII.

On the Difficulties of Scripture.*

In his solis literis, et quod non assequor, tamen adoro.—In this part of literature alone, even what I do not understand, I yet revere.

IF there is any thing in human affairs to be approached with awe, and viewed with veneration, it is the WRITTEN WORD of revelation. Acknowledged

* The following passage from LE BLANC is worthy consideration.

Verum quid SPIRITUS SANCTI testimonium conferat, et quid momenti habeant argumenta, quibus auctoritas divina Scripturæ suadetur, adhuc ut illi quam par est fidem adhibeamus, non possumus melius explicare quam verbis viri celeberrimi qui sic eâ de re loquitur.

“Maneat ergo hoc fixum, quos Spiritus intus docuit, solidè acquiescere in Scripturâ, et hanc quidem esse αὐτοπιστον, neque demonstrationi et rationibus subjici eam fas esse; quam tamen meretur apud nos certitudinem, Spiritûs testimonio consequi. Etsi enim reverentiam, suâ sibi ultro majestâte conciliat, tunc tamen demum serid nos afficit, quum per Spiritum obfignata est cordibus nostris. Illius ergo virtute illuminati, jam non aut nostro, aut aliorum judicio credimus, a Deo esse Scripturam; sed supra humanum judicium, certo certius constituimus, non secus ac si ipsius Dei Numen illic intueremur, hominum ministerio ab ipsissimo Dei ore ad nos fluxisse. Non ARGUMENTA, non verisimilitudines quærimus, quibus judicium nostrum incumbat; sed, ut rei extra æstimandi aleam posita, judicium ingeniumque subijcimus. Non qualiter superstitionibus solent miseri homines captivam mentem addicere; sed quia non dubiam vim Numinis illic vigere ac spirare, quâ ad parendum, scientes quidem ac volentes, vividius tamen et efficacius quam pro humana voluntate aut scientiâ, trahimur ac accendimur. Talis ergo est persuasio quæ RATIONES NON REQUIRAT: talis notitia cui optime ratio consuet, nempe in quâ securius constantiusque mens quiescit quàm in ullis rationibus: TALIS DENIQUE SENSUS, qui nisi ex coelesti revelatione nasci nequeat.”

“But how much,” says Le Blanc, “the testimony of the Holy Spirit contributes, and what weight mere human arguments possess, in contributing to a belief in the divine authority of the Scripture; moreover how expedient it is to give an implicit credit to the Spirit’s testimony; I cannot explain better than in the words of a most celebrated writer, who speaks on the subject thus:

“Let this be a settled truth, viz. that those whom the Holy Spirit hath taught internally, acquiesce in the divine authority of the Scripture, knowledge of sanctity and long duration combine to throw an air of divinity around it. It is worthy to be kept in the holy of holies. But I cannot agree with those zealous votaries who pretend either that there are no difficulties in it, or that they are all removeable by the light of learning. I confess that criticism has removed many difficulties; but I am convinced that many still remain, which, I fear, will never give way to human sagacity. There they must remain, with all the majesty of clouds and darkness around them, till the sun of righteousness shall appear in his full glory.

Scripture, without wavering, and on the solidest grounds; that the holy Scripture carries its own evidence with it, and ought not to be subjected to demonstration and arguments, and that the certainty which it obtains in our minds is obtained by the TESTIMONY of the Spirit. For although it commands our reverence by its own native majesty, yet it then only seriously affects us when it is SEALED on our hearts by the Spirit. Enlightened by the efficacy of the Spirit, we no longer believe, from our own judgment, or the judgment of others, that the Scripture is from God; but above the decisions of human judgment, we conclude with absolute certainty, just as if we saw the Deity there, that the Scripture came to us (by the instrumentality of man indeed) from the very mouth of God himself. We no longer seek ARGUMENTS OF PROBABILITIES on which our judgment may rely; but we now submit our judgment and our understanding as to a matter placed beyond the fallibility of conjecture. Not indeed as wretched persons who submit their minds enslaved to superstitions; but because we feel the energy of the Deity breathing and operating with full force in the Scriptures, by which we are drawn and animated to obey, with our eyes open and our wills inclined, yet in a more lively and efficacious manner than is compatible with merely human will or human knowledge."

"Such, in the result, is our FULL PERSUASION, as that it does not require ARGUMENTS; such our knowledge, as is consistent with the most enlightened reason; as being a sort of persuasion and a sort of knowledge, in which the mind rests with more security and more constancy than in any argumentative deductions. And such, lastly, is our FEELING, as cannot arise but from revelation from heaven."

LE BLANC Thefes. p. 30. CALVIN, Institut. Lib. 1. c. 7.

But

But shall difficulties cause disbelief? Are there then no difficulties in the world of nature, as well as in the world of grace? I cannot step into the garden or the meadow; I cannot cast my eyes to the horizon, without encountering difficulties. Yet I believe the existence of the things I see there, and I am led from the observation of general good, mixed with partial evil, to conclude, that verily there is a God. I conclude in the same manner, from what I do understand and know to be good in the gospel, that verily Jesus is the Christ; and that the parts of the gospel which I do not comprehend, are good, because those which I am able to understand are so beyond all doubt and comparison.

All that is necessary to my happiness in the gospel is sufficiently clear. I learn there that the HOLY GHOST is vouchsafed to me and to all men, now and till time shall be no more. This I consider as the LIVING GOSPEL. This supplies all defects, if any there should be, in the written word; and the dark and unintelligible parts of the gospel, surrounded by celestial radiance, become like spots in the sun, which neither deform its beauty, nor diminish its lustre. I am not therefore offended by them; I bow to them with reverence, as to sacred things upon the altar, covered with a veil from the eyes of mortal or profane intrusion. It is enough that I have learned, in the gospel, many moral truths; and this ONE GREAT TRUTH, that God Almighty, at this moment, pours an EMANATION of himself into the souls of all who seek the glorious gift by fervent prayer, and endeavour to retain it by obedience to his will. It is enough: why need I perplex my understanding with searching into those secret things which belong unto the Lord; or acquire a minute, cavilling habit, which never can discover discover any thing on this subject of more importance than that which I already know; but which, if indulged presumptuously, may lead me to scepticism, and terminate in infidelity *? Some parts of the holy volume are sealed: I shall in vain attempt to burst them open: but I will not condemn what I cannot understand. I will wait with patience and humility for GOD's good time. In the interval I will rejoice; and my flesh shall rest in hope; because I have been admitted to inspect the book, and have learned that the SPIRIT still attends the written word, ministering at this hour, and illuminating, with the lamp of Heaven, whatever darkness overshadows the path of life.

This persuasion adds new glory to the written gospel †. It throws a heavenly lustre over the page. The HOLY BOOK is not left alone to effect the great purpose of man's recovery; so that, whatever difficulties or defects it may be allowed to retain, by the wise providence of GOD, the difficulties will be removed, and the defects supplied, so far as to accomplish the great end, by the operation of the Holy Ghost, which accompanies it in its progress down the stream of time, like the pillar of fire, attending the children of Israel ‡.

* Titubabit fides, si vacillet Scripturarum divinarum auctoritas.—Faith will totter, if the authority of the divine Scriptures is shaken.

Aug. de Christ. Doct. Lib. 1. c. 37.

† The written Gospel, like the apostles, may plant and water, but it is GOD that giveth the increase.

‡ Όσοι υιοί εισι του φωτός ή της διακονίας της καινής διαθήκης εν τω πνεύματι αγίω, ΘΕΟΔΙΔΑΚΤΟΙ ΕΙΣΙΝ· αυτη γαρ η χαρις επιγραφει εν ταίς καρδιαίς αυτων τους νόμους του πνεύματος· ουκ οφείλουσιν ουκ εις τας γραφάς μόνον τας δια μέλλουσας γεγραμμενίας πληροφορεῖσθαι, ἀλλὰ καὶ εἰς τας πλάκας τῆς καρδίας η̄ χαρις του Θεου εγγράφει τους νόμους του πνεύματος καὶ τα ἐπουράνια μυστήρια.—As many as are the sons of the light, and of the ministration of the New Testament in the Holy Spirit, are taught of God; for grace itself inscribes upon their hearts the laws of the Spirit. They are not therefore indebted to the SCRIPTURES ONLY, to the word written with INK, for their Christian perfection; but

SECTION XXVIII.

The OMNIPRESENCE of God a Doctrine universally allowed; but how is God every where present but by his Spirit, which is the HOLY GHOST?

Quæst. Quæst. 1177.—Nothing is without Deity.

MARC ANTONIN.

THEY who maintain, if there be any such, that God having, about eighteen hundred years ago, signified his will to mankind, has ever since that time withdrawn his agency from the human mind, do, in effect, deny the omnipresence, and with it the omniscience, providence, and goodness of the Deity. But what say the scriptures? HE IS NOT FAR FROM EVERY ONE OF US; FOR IN HIM WE LIVE, AND MOVE, AND HAVE OUR BEING*.

But is it to be believed, that when he is thus intimately present with us, he either cannot, or will not, influence our sentiments? Why is he thus present? or why should he confine his agency over us to a LITTLE BOOK, in a foreign and dead but the grace of God writes upon the tablet of their hearts the laws of the Spirit, and the mysteries of Heaven.

MACARIUS in Homil. 15.

“ How doth the Holy Ghost reveal unto us the truth of the Scriptures? I answer, by removing those impediments that hindered, and by bestowing those graces that make us capable of this knowledge. There is in us a two-fold impediment; first, Ignorance, by which our eyes are closed that we cannot see the light; secondly, Corruption, by which, though we see the light, yet we cannot but naturally hate it and turn from it. The Holy Spirit cures both by a double remedy; first, of illumination, restoring our understanding to some part of its primitive perfection; secondly, of sanctification, infusing into our desires and affections some degrees of their primitive holiness and purity.”

PEMBLE.

* Acts, xvii. 27.

language,

language, which many never see at all, which more cannot read, which none can perfectly understand; and concerning the literal meaning of the most important DOCTRINAL parts of which, the most learned and judicious are to this hour divided in opinion?

The heathens * had more enlarged and worthier ideas of the divine nature. They indeed believed in supernatural agency on the mind of man; though they disgraced their belief by the absurdities of polytheism. Every part of the universe was peopled by them with supernatural agents, and the most distinguished among them believed their virtuous sentiments inspired, and their good actions directed by a tutelar deity. I dwell not upon the instance of Socrates's Demon †; and I only mention the topic,

* Ipse Deus HUMANO GENERI ministrat; ubique et omnibus præsto est.—God himself administers to the human race; he is present every where, and to every man. SENECA EPIST.

Quocunque te flexeris, ibi illum videtis occurrentem tibi. Nihil ab illo vacat. Opus suum ipse implet.—Whichever way you turn, you will meet God. Nothing is without him. He fills his own work completely. SENEC. DE BENEFIC. Lib. 4. Cap. 8.

† It is worth while, however, to insert the following fine passage from Plato, in which Socrates asserts the necessity of supernatural agency, in removing a dark CLOUD from the human mind, previously to its being able to learn how to regulate conduct, either towards gods or men. Reason, till this dark cloud should be removed by Divine Providence, he thought incapable of discovering either moral or divine truth with certainty.

S. Ἀναγκαῖον ἔν ἐστι περιμένειν ἕως ἄν τις μάθῃ ὡς δεῖ πρὸς θεοὺς καὶ πρὸς ἀνθρώπους διακρίσθαι. A. Πότε ἔν παύσαι ἡ χρεία ἐστίν, ὡς Σώκρατες; καὶ τίς ὁ παιδεύων;—S. Οὐτός ἐστιν ὡς μέλει περὶ σὺ. ἀλλὰ δοκεῖ μοι, ὡς περ τῷ Λισιμάχῃ φησὶ τὴν Ἀθηναῶν Ὀμηρεῖ ἀπὸ τῶν ὀφθαλμῶν ἀφελῆν τὴν ἈΚΑΤ'Ν,

Ὅρβ' ἐν γινώσκῃ ἡμῖν θεὸν ἡδὲ καὶ ἄνδρα, ἵτω καὶ σε δεῖν ἀπὸ τῆς ψυχῆς πρῶτον ἀφελῆναι τὴν ἈΚΑΤ'Ν, ἣ τῶν παρῶσα τυγχάνει, τληνικαῦτ' ἡδὲ προσφέρειν δὲ ἄν μέλλας γινώσκειν ἵμῃν “κακὸν ἡδὲ καὶ ἐσθλόν.” οὐκ μὲν γὰρ ἔν ἐν μοι δοκῇ δυνηθῆναι.
Platonis Alcibiades II. prope Finem.—(Socrates and Alcibiades discourse.) S. It is necessary then to wait till one is informed how one ought to behave, both in religious and social duties, to God and to men.

topic, to prove that the doctrine is not likely to be very UNREASONABLE, since it was maintained by men who are acknowledged to have been singularly endowed with the rational faculty.

The omnipotence, omnipresence, and omniscience of God were strenuously maintained, not only by the wisest of the heathens, but the most learned and rational of Christian divines; among whom was Dr. Samuel Clarke, a man by constitution and studies as far removed from enthusiasm, as it is possible to conceive. But the omnipresence of God being allowed as a true doctrine, it will not be difficult to believe his agency on the human mind by supernatural impression. The difficulty would be to believe that the divine Spirit could be PRESENT always and every where with us, and yet never act upon us, but leave the moral world, after the writing of the New Testament, to depend on the fidelity * of translations, the interpretations of fallible men, the preaching and teaching of scholars, deriving all they know of ancient tongues and ancient opinions from dictionaries, and differing continually even on such doctrines as constitute the very corner-stones of the whole Christian fabric.

men.—A. O Socrates, when will that time come, and who shall teach me?—S. EVEN HE WHO CARETH FOR YOU; but it appears to me, as Homer represents Minerva removing a dark cloud from the eyes of Diomed that he might distinguish gods from men in the battle, so he who CARETH FOR YOU must first remove the dark cloud from your mind, which now hangs over it, and then you will use those means by which you may know “the good from ill,” which, in your present state, you seem to me unable to distinguish.

The philosopher seems to me to have seen the necessity of divine revelation, and to have predicted the evangelical illumination of the Spirit of God.

* If the fidelity of men may be depended upon, their accuracy cannot; since Dr. MILL, a celebrated editor of the Greek Testament, has collected THIRTY THOUSAND variations in the copies of that little book.

The

The doctrine of God's total inaction, in the moral and intellectual world, is irreligious and unphilosophical. The wisest heathens exploded it. Fortunately it is refuted in the strongest language of scripture. For after our Saviour's ascension, the Holy Spirit was expressly promised, and the MINISTRATION of the Spirit, co-operating on the heart of man with the written word, is to continue its energy, as it does at this hour, to the end of time.

The spirit * of God is every where present, like the air which we inhale. It is no less necessary to intellectual life, than the air to animal. There is a remarkable passage, apposite to the present subject, in the meditations of Antoninus, which I shall give in the translation of Collier, and as it is quoted by Delany.

"Let your soul," says the philosopher, "receive the Deity, as your blood does the air; for the influences of the one are no less vital than the other. This correspondence is very practicable; for there is an ambient OMNIPRESENT spirit, which lies as open and pervious to your mind, as the air you breathe does to your lungs. But then you must remember to be disposed to draw it.

"If," continues Dr. Delany, "this gracious gift of Heaven should be denied, because it is not found to dwell with the wicked, I answer,

* Ἀπλῶν τῇ οὐσίᾳ, ποικίλων ταῖς δυνάμεσιν. ὅλον ἕκαστω παρὸν καὶ ὅλον ἀπανταχοῦ ὃν, ἀπαθῶς μεριζόμενον, καὶ ὁλοσχερῶς μετασχημέμιον.—Simple in its essence, various in its powers, present in each individual in its entire state, yet in a state equally entire universally diffused. Divided without suffering separation, and imparted without destroying its integrity.

BASIL de Spiritu Sancto.

Τὸ πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον ἐν καὶ τὸ αὐτὸ πανταχοῦ.—The Holy Spirit is ONE and is every where without losing its identity.

CL. ALEX. PÆD. Lib. 1.

"that

“ that men may as well deny the existence of the “ dew, because it is not often found upon clouds
 “ and fith, nor even upon grass, trampled with “ polluted feet.

“ Let the grace of God be considered as having “ some analogy, some resemblance to the DEW OF “ HEAVEN; the dew of Heaven, which falls alike
 “ upon all objects below it, as the grace of God “ doth upon all mankind, but resteth not upon “ things defiled. Purity abideth not with pollution.”

The argument from analogy has ever been deemed powerful in the support of Christian doctrines. In support of this doctrine, let it have a place.

There is an elemental fire, the electrical fluid, diffused through all nature. Though unseen, its energy is mighty. So also, without doubt, the Divine Spirit actuates the intellectual world, omnipresent, though invisible, all-powerful, though gentle as the vernal breeze.

SECTION XXIX.

The Want of Faith could not be criminal, if it depended only on the Understanding; but Faith is a Virtue, because it originates from virtuous Dispositions favoured by the Holy Spirit.

FAITH is always required and represented in the gospel as a moral virtue *. This alone establishes the doctrine of this book, that faith, or the evidence

* “ All faith may be deemed voluntary, no less than intellectual;
 “ and Christian faith is, especially such as requiring thereto more application of soul, managed by choice, than any other.

“ Infidelity doth arise from corruption of mind by any kind of brutish lust; any irregular passion, any bad inclination or habit, any evidence of the Christian religion, arises from obedience to its laws. There could be no virtue in faith, if it were produced in the mind by demonstrative proofs, such as many apologists for Christianity have endeavoured to display. But there is great virtue in OBEEDIENCE to the moral precepts of the gospel. The heart must be well inclined that endeavours to learn and perform its duty from the dictates of the gospel, notwithstanding the doubts or disbelief which may occasionally arise in the understanding concerning the divine original of so excellent a rule of morality. Such an inclination draws down upon it the favour of God, and consequently the illumination of the Holy Ghost. The doubts and disbelief are gradually removed. A life of piety and good morals is the never-failing result. And thus faith both begins and ends in virtue.
 “ such

"The reason," says Dr. Clarke, "why faith (which is generally looked upon as an act of understanding, and so not in our power) in the New Testament is always insisted upon as a moral virtue, is, because faith, in the scripture sense, is not barely an act of the understanding, but a mixed act of the will also, consisting very

"such evil disposition of soul as doth obstruct the entertainment of the doctrine which doth prohibit and check it, doth condemn it and brand it with infamy, doth denounce punishment and fire to it, whence men of corrupt minds and reprobate concerning the faith (2 Tim. iii. 8.), and men of corrupt minds, destitute of the truth, are attributes well conjoined by St. Paul (1 Tim. vi. 5.)

"Infidelity, in its nature, doth involve an affected blindness and ignorance of the noblest and most useful truths; a bad use of reason, a disregard of God's providence, a despight thereto, abuse of his grace, bad opinions of him, and bad affections towards him."

ISAAC BARROW.

"St. Austin says, non ideo currit rota ut sit rotunda, &c.—As a wheel runs not that it may be round, but because it is round, so the will believes not that it may be regenerate, but because it is regenerate."

PEMBLE.

"much “ much in that simplicity and unprejudicedness of “ mind, which our Saviour calls receiving the “ kingdom of God, as a little child, in that free“ dom from guile and deceit, which was the cha“ racter of Nathaniel, an Israelite indeed ; and “ in that teachable disposition, and desire to know

 “ the will of God, for which the Beræans were “ so highly commended, who searched the scriptures
 “ daily, whether these things were true.”

This simple, teachable, unprejudiced state of mind is in itself amiable. It is pleasing both to God and good men. It is esteemed even by the wicked. It is precisely the state in which the Holy Spirit delights, and with which he will make his abode, bringing with him comfort and illumination. To use the poet's words :

“ ——— He must delight in virtue;
 “ And that which he delights in must be happy.”

If indeed it were a moral virtue merely to believe a narrative on the credibility of the narrators, or the probability of the circumstances, then would it be a moral virtue to believe a well-authenticated news-paper. But to believe the gospel requires purity and piety of heart, those lovely qualities which the imagination conceives characteristic of the angelic nature. It implies a disposition which delights in devotion to God, and beneficence to man ; a disposition cheerful, tranquil, and which enjoys every innocent satisfaction of this life, sweetened with the hope, that when the sun sets, it will rise in new and additional splendor. Faith, accompanied with hope and charity, constitutes the true Christian ; a living image of virtue, and forming that beautiful model which the philosopher wished, but despaired to see ; TRUTH EMBODIED,

BODIED, VIRTUE PERSONIFIED, walking forth among the sons of men, and exciting, by its conspicuous loveliness, an universal desire of imitation.

SECTION XXX.

Of the scriptural word "UNCTION;" its high mysterious Meaning.

THE very title of our Saviour (משיח and ΧΡΙΣΤΟΣ) is the ANOINTED; and the operation of the Holy Ghost is called in the sacred scriptures (ΧΡΙΣΜΑ) UNCTION. This idea of the CHRISMA pervades the whole doctrine of grace:

"The anointing with oil," says Hammond, "denoted, among the Jews, the preferring one before another, (and the Targum generally renders it by a word which signifies preferring or advancing,) and so became the ceremony of CONSECRATING to any special office, and was used in the installing men to places of any eminence."

The word Chrisma, or unction, was hence assumed to signify the act of the Holy Ghost, in CONSECRATING those who are favoured by divine grace. The consequence of this UNCTION is illumination; for St. John says, "Ye have an UNCTION from the Holy One, (the Holy Ghost,) and ye (in consequence) KNOW ALL THINGS *," that is, all things that concern the nature and EVIDENCE of CHRIST's religion. Again he says, "The anointing which ye have received of HIM

* 1 John, ii. 20,

" (the

“ (the Holy Ghost) abideth in you ; and ye need
 “ not that any MAN teach you ; but as the same “ ANOINTING teacheth you all things, and is truth,
 “ and is no lie ; even as it has taught you, ye shall “ abide in him *.”

The idea of the CHRISMA, I repeat, or the unction of the Holy Ghost†, pervades the whole doctrine of divine grace. It gives a name to him who brought down the great gift of the Spirit, and who himself had the hallowed UNCTION without measure‡; for what is signified by CHRIST, but the Anointed§ ?

I have introduced these observations on the name of CHRIST, partly with a view to expose the false learning of a French philosopher, who has attacked Christianity with singular artifice. The celebrated Mr. Volney affirms, that Christianity is but the allegorical worship of the SUN—a mere mode of oriental superstition, under the cabalistical names of CHRISEN or CHRIST, the etymology of which, according to him, has no reference to the CHRISMA, UNCTION, but to CHRIS, an astrological name among the Indians for the SUN, and signifying conservator ; “ whence,” says he, “ the Hindoo “ god, Chrisen or Christna, and the Christian
 “ CHRISTOS, the son of Mary.” Many of the French philosophers, and perhaps Volney, are unacquainted with Greek ||.

But I hope the christian scholar will never give up the Greek etymology of the word CHRIST, evi-

* 1 John, ii. 20.

† Dieu fait couler dant l'ame je ne sçais quelle ONCTION, qui la remplit. — God causes to flow into the soul an unction which I cannot describe, but which fills, or satisfies, it completely. BRETONNEAU.

‡ John, iii. 34.

§ κατ' ἐξοχην.

|| The opinion of some of the antients that Christus was χριστος, or the good, and Christiani were χριστιανοί, though mistaken, was much more honourable to Christianity.

dently a translation of the Hebrew Messiah; nor the sublime and mysterious doctrine which it leads to, the metaphorical anointing of the Holy Ghost, the sanctifying, consecrating, purifying influence of divine grace*.

SECTION XXXI.

On what is called by devout Persons EXPERIENCE in Religion.

THERE is a peace of God, which passeth all understanding, and baffles all power of description. The flavour of a peach or a pine-apple is delightful to the palate, but words can give no

* Mr. Volney further says, that "YESUS, or Jesus, was an antient name given to young Bacchus, the clandestine son of the virgin Minerva, who, in the whole history of his life, and even in his death, calls to mind the history of the God of the Christians; that is, the STAR OF THE DAY, of which they are both of them EMBLEMS." Let us avoid the folly of fanciful learning; and say rather that the Star of the Day is an EMBLEM of JESUS CHRIST, gloriously enlightening, and vitally warming, by his influence, the INTELLECTUAL system.

The opinion of the Jews, an oriental people, respecting the Deity ought to be here considered by Christians. "After the second essence," says Eusebius, "comes the Holy Spirit, which the Jews place in this royal dignity and degree of principality, because it is the will of the great Architect to appoint him to the principality of those inferior beings who may want his assistance: who, therefore, obtaining the third place, confers on those who are inferior to him, those excellent virtues, which he received from another; the DIVINE LOGOS, his superior, who is second to the supreme, unbegotten, and Almighty God."

Euseb. Præp. Evang. Lib. 7. Cap. 15.

"All the Hebrew divines," says Bishop Clayton, "after that God who is over all, and after this first-born Wisdom (or Logos) pay divine worship to the third and holy Power, which they call RUACH HAKKODESH, the Holy Spirit, by which they themselves are illuminated when they are divinely inspired. They thought the angel GABRIEL was employed in this holy office."

idea

idea of it to him who has never tasted them. There is a fragrance in a rose, which, while the nerves perceive it with complacency, cannot be communicated, in the slightest degree, by language. Such also is the heavenly manna; and he who would form a just notion of its exquisite sweetness, must taste it. No learning, not even the argumentative skill of an Aristotle, can afford him the least idea of it, without actual sensation.

“ Were I to define Divinity,” (says the admirable author of Select Discourses,) “ I should rather call it a divine life, than * a divine science; it being something rather to be understood by a spiritual sensation, than by any verbal description.

“ Divinity is a true efflux from the eternal light, which, like the sun-beams, does not only enlighten, but heat and enliven. The knowledge of divinity that appears in systems is but a poor wax-light; but the powerful ENERGY of divine knowledge displays itself in purified souls, the true Πεδιον Αληθειας †.

“ To seek our divinity merely in books and writings, is to seek the living among the dead. We do but in vain seek God, many times, in these, where his truth too often is not so much enshrined as intombed. No; intra te quare Deum; seek for God within thine own soul. He is best discerned ‡ νοερα επαφη, by an intellectual feeling. Εστι δε ψυχης αιθησις τις, the soul itself has a certain feeling.

“ The reason why, notwithstanding all our acute reasonings and subtile pursuits, truth pre-

* Bishop Taylor and Mr. Smith coincide here, not only in sentiment, but expression.

† The soil in which TRUTH grows and flourishes, or the basis on which truth stands.

‡ Plotinus.

“ vails no more in the world, is, that we so often “ disjoin truth and goodness, which of themselves
 “ can never be disunited.

“ There is a knowing of the truth as it is in “ Jesus; as it is in a Christ-like nature; as it is “ in that sweet, mild, humble, and loving spirit
 “ of Jesus, which spreads itself, like a morning
 “ sun, upon the souls of good men, full of light
 “ and life. There is an inward beauty, life, and “ loveliness in divine truth, which cannot be “ known, but only when it is digested into life
 “ and practice.

“ Our Saviour, the great master of divine truth,
 “ would not, while he was here on earth, draw
 “ it up into a system or body, nor would his disci“ ples after him: he would not lay it out to us in “ any canons or articles of belief, not being so care“ ful to stock and enrich the world with opinions, “ as with true piety, and a godlike pattern of “ purity, as the best way to thrive in all spiritual “ understanding. His main scope was to promote “ a holy life, as the best and most compendious “ way to a right belief. He hangs all true ac“ quaintance with divinity upon the doing God’s “ will. If any man will do his will, he shall know
 “ of the doctrine, whether it be of God. This is “ that alone which will make us, as St. Peter tells “ us, that we shall not be barren nor unfruitful
 “ in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour.

“ There is an inward sweetness and delicious-“ ness in divine truth, which no sensual mind can “ taste or relish. The ψυχικὸς ἀνὴρ, the natural “ man, savours not the things of God. Corrupt “ passions and terrene affections are apt, of their “ own nature, to disturb all serene thoughts, to “ precipitate our judgments, and warp our under“ standings. It was a good maxim of the old “ Jewish

“ Jewish writers, that the Holy Spirit* dwells
 “ not in earthly passions. Divinity is not so well “ perceived by a subtile wit, ωσπερ αισθησει μενα- “ Γαρμεν, as by pure sensation.

“ He that will find truth, must seek it with a “ free judgment and a SANCTIFIED mind: he
 “ that thus seeks, shall find: he shall live in truth,
 “ and truth shall live in him: it shall be like a “ stream of living waters issuing out of his own “ soul: he shall drink of the waters of his own “ cistern, and be satisfied: he shall every morning
 “ find this heavenly MANNA lying upon his soul,
 “ and be fed with it to eternal life. He will find “ satisfaction within, FEELING himself in conjunc“ tion with truth, though all the world should “ DISPUTE against him.”

Thus the heart of a good man will experience the most pleasurable sensations, when he finds, and find it he will, the pearl of great price, the living energetic gospel, lodged, by divine grace, in the sanctuary of his bosom. He will be filled with all joy in believing; and thus EXPERIENCING the efficacy of the Christian religion, he can entertain no doubt of its truth, its divine original†. The real difficulties and obscurities of the scriptures give him little trouble, much less the cavils of sceptics.
 He has the witness in himself‡, that the gospel is the word of God, the incorruptible seed§ of holiness, and such felicity as the world never gave, and can-

“ רוח הקדש לא שדה בעצב ולא בכעש ” *

The RUACH HAKKODESH, or Spirit of Holiness, dwells not with turbulent and angry tempers.

† “ Christianity,” says Law, “ is its own proof; it can be “ proved by nothing but itself; it wants neither miracles nor “ outward witness; but, like the sun, is its own discoverer.”

‡ 1 John, v. 10.

§ 1 Pet. i. 23.

not take away. He cannot adequately describe his* state. It is an UNSPEAKABLE gift. He feels it; and is grateful.

The excellent Norris, after having spent many years in the usual studies of academics, in logic, metaphysics, and other, what he calls, unconcerning curiosities, comes to the following resolution:

"I think," says he, "I shall now chiefly apply myself to the reading of such books as are rather persuasive than instructive; such as are sapid, pathetic, and divinely relishing; such as warm, kindle, and enlarge the interior, and awaken the divine sense (or feeling) of the soul; as considering with myself, that I have now, after so much reading and speculation, more need of HEAT than of light. Though if I were for more light still, I think this would prove the best method of illumination; and when all is done, the love of God is the best light of the soul. For I consider, with the excellent CARDINAL BONA, that a man may have knowledge without love; but he that loves, although he wants sciences, humanly acquired, yet he will know more than human wisdom can teach him, because he has that master within him, who teaches man knowledge †."

If other students and teachers were to follow his example in this instance, there would be much more true devotion and sincere piety in the world; and few would be infidels, except among the desperately profligate, who harden their hearts, and cloud their understandings by habitual vice and in-

* THOMAS A KEMPIS thus attempts to describe the happy state, imperfectly indeed, but devoutly: "Frequens Christi visitatio cum homine interno, dulcis fermocinatio, grata consolatio, multa pax," &c.—

† Via Compend. ad Deum.

temperance :

temperance; who fear Christianity should be true, and therefore, with fool-hardy presumption, resolve to deny it.

SECTION XXXII.

On the Seasons of Grace.

THERE are times when the mind seems sensible of a peculiar serenity; the understanding is clear to discern spiritual things, and the heart glows with sentiments of Christian piety and general benevolence. At those times, man appears to be exalted above the common level of mortality. All pure, all peace, all love, all joy, his nature endeavours to soar above the earth, and to reach the source of all excellence. A sweet complacency, in those moments, diffuses itself over the soul, and an internal satisfaction is experienced, which no language can describe; but which renders him who feels it as happy as it is possible to become in a sublunary existence.

These are the halcyon times which may be termed the seasons of grace; the seasons, when the God of mercy, compassionating the weary pilgrim, sends down the cup of comfort to exhilarate and reward him; displays the lamp of heaven, to illuminate his path as he travels in the valley*.

These

* “ We sometimes find our understandings clear to discern the “ subjects of divinity, to look forward into futurity, perceiving “ things there with the lively colours of present objects, having an “ unconfused, though incomplete, conception of goodness, of equity, “ of universal providence, rejoicing in its protection, satisfied with

These favours, as I firmly believe, are offered to all the sons of Adam who do not presumptuously, and repeatedly, and knowingly offend the donor; for that man may grieve the Spirit and quench the Spirit, we are told in the strong language of scripture.

But a proper reception of this divine benefit will secure its frequency and continuance. Our own endeavours must be exerted with vigilance and constancy, to preserve the divine frame of mind which it may have produced. Nothing can effect this but the avoidance of habitual vice and impurity, and the practice of virtue. But if, after all, there should be seasons of insensibility and coldness, it must not be concluded that the spiritual assistance is withdrawn in displeasure. For even in the darkest valley, an unseen hand can support and guide the pilgrim in his progress; and after the clouds shall have prevailed their time, the sun will break forth with all its warmth and lustre.

It appears to me to be the first object of CHRISTIAN PHILOSOPHY to secure the duration and frequent recurrence of the seasons of grace. In order to accomplish this end, whatever conduces to the moral improvement of the heart must be pursued with ardour. The fine morality, discovered by the light of nature and the feelings of the heart, probably assisted, among the heathens, by divine interposition, may and ought to be called in to add something to the work of Christian improvement; for the best heathen ETHICS are founded on truth,

“ its proceedings, earnest to perform laudable actions, going through “ our duties with TASTE AND PLEASURE; THESE I TAKE TO “ BE THE SEASONS OF GRACE.”

TUCKER'S (or SEARCH'S) Light of Nature pursued.

and

and therefore immutably valuable. A state of grace without morality, I firmly believe, is not permitted by him who is of purer eyes than to behold iniquity.

But the man who is blessed with the visitations of the divine Spirit, feels his heart, in consequence of it, spontaneously inclined to every thing that is lovely and of good report. Virtue appears to him amiable, and easy to be practised; and vice disgusting, at once the pollution and the misery of his nature. All the angry passions subside in him; the gentle and benevolent affections grow in their place, and man becomes what he was before the lapse of Adam, and what the gospel revelation was designed to render him, a being little lower than the angels.

SECTION XXXIII.

Of mistaking the Effects of Imagination for the Seasons of Grace.

THERE are many who will scarcely allow the existence of any thing which they cannot subject to the notice of the senses. They must literally see the truth of every thing which requires their assent, or they will doubt its reality. To them, whatever is said on the subject of a spiritual world, or an invisible agency on the soul of man, appears to be the effusion of fancy, and the sick man's dream.

And indeed the experience of mankind justifies great caution in distinguishing between the actual operation of the Holy Spirit, and the delirious effects of a too lively imagination. The imagination, heated by the devotional flame, has often kindled a destructive fire. It is indeed the parent of fanaticism, in all its extremities, and all its evil consequences. As, therefore, the real agency of the Holy Spirit is to be invited and cherished, so the mere imagination of it is to be most studiously avoided.

That the whole doctrine is not imaginary, is evident to him who reads and believes the gospel. Such operations are there plainly spoken of and promised as the greatest blessings to the human race. Their effects are described as great and sudden, in affording both comfort, holiness, and illumination.

The reality of seasons of grace cannot be questioned but by him who at the same time questions the whole system of revelation. And a rational man, it is to be believed, will find no difficulty in satisfying himself that he is not deluded by his imagination, when he feels himself particularly virtuous, pure, benevolent, and open to celestial influence.

But as all men are not governed by reason, and none are governed by it uniformly, it certainly is probable that the delusions of imagination may often be mistaken for supernatural assistance. A few cautionary suggestions on the subject may not, therefore, be superfluous.

Since it is possible that the best-intentioned may be thus deluded, let every man try his spirit by the fruits it produces; not by a sudden or momentary fruit, but by the frequency, abundance, and permanency of its productions. If it habitually produces peace, joy, purity, piety, and benevolence, let no man attribute it to his imagination; but give the glory to God, and be grateful.

But if it display itself in pride, self-conceit, and contempt of others, in acts of violence, in disturbing good order, in any behaviour which seems to argue an opinion of peculiar inspiration from heaven, of a partial commission given an individual to reform the world by irregular, uncharitable, and offensive interposition; if it pretends to visions and illuminations unexperienced by the best and wisest of men; if it assumes the privilege of actually conversing IN PERSON with Jesus Christ, and talks of the hour and moment when the Holy Ghost rushed upon the bosom; it is time to beware of the infatuation of a deluded fancy. There is certainly every reason to believe that such a temper of mind is not from God.

But it is folly and impiety to confound with these that sweet frame and disposition of mind, which the scriptures describe as descending from the Holy Ghost, and which has indeed every mark of divine origin.

He who condemns the doctrine of divine agency on the mind of man, as FANCIFUL, must, if he is consistent, include the whole of the Christian religion, and all that has ever been said or written in favour of it, under the same imputation. According to him, the fair edifice must melt away, like a palace of ice, when the sun of reason shines upon it. But we maintain that the true gospel, which is indeed the doctrine of grace, is the rock of ages*.

* Alii disputent, ego mirabor et venerabor.—Let others dispute; I will wonder and worship. Dr. HORSBERRY says, “The Pelagians of old denied the doctrine of divine grace, and this seems to be too much the temper of some writers in our own times. The doctrine is this: that the Holy Ghost, by a secret operation on men’s minds, disposes them to the love, and assists them in the practice of virtue. This influence is commonly called Grace. The necessity of this influence, or as our church scruples not to call it, “this SECTION XXXIV.

Of Seasons of Desertion, or supposed Absence of the Spirit.

THERE are seasons in the lives of good men, when their sense of spiritual things is comparatively dull; and many, at these times, have been alarmed with an idea of being totally deserted by the Spirit, and have fallen into a state of despondency. But if there were no other proof that the grace of God is still vouchsafed to them, their uneasiness alone would evince it. While pain is felt, the surgeon apprehends not a mortification.

But the alarm, it may be presumed, is, to the pious Christian, unnecessary. For it is certain that the visitations of the Holy Spirit are sometimes more sensible than at others; and that when they are not sensible at all, its guidance and benign protection may continue unaltered. The light sometimes shines with a bright and strong effulgence, to guide us into the right way; but while we are proceeding in it safely and regularly, and without an inclination to deviate, or immediate danger of falling, the rays may be emitted less powerfully, because less necessary. The moment there appears danger of wandering or of stumbling,

“ this inspiration of the Holy Spirit, (Communion|Service,) arises from
 “ the weakness and corruption of our nature. This is a brief account of the doctrine, which has usually been taught in the Christian church; BUT WHICH some WRITERS OF GREAT NOTE (as was before intimated) have treated with a GREAT DEGREE OF RESERVEDNESS.

See Sermons by MATTHEW HOBERRY, D. D. and particularly that on John, iii. 8.

the

the lamp is ready to shine with instantaneous radiance. Thus an infant, just beginning to walk, is guided by the parent's hand, watched with the parent's eye, and encouraged by the parent's voice, and yet it is often permitted to go alone, without assistance or encouragement, in order to exercise its strength, and to give it a due degree of confidence. But the tender mother may still hold the leading-string unobserved by the infant, and, at the very first lapse, save the fall. The sun, though obscured by clouds, affords light and warmth, guides mankind in all their operations, and supports both animal and vegetative life.

The mistaken opinion that ecstasy and rapture are always necessary to evince the presence of the Holy Spirit, has brought the doctrine into discredit among the sober and rational, and introduced much misery among the ignorant, the weak, and the fanciful. The sober and rational neither experienced such ardour without intermission, nor did they believe the nature of man, as he is now constituted, capable of supporting it. The ignorant, the weak, and the fanciful, endeavouring to raise themselves to a height which they could either not reach or not maintain, fell from disappointment to dejection, and from dejection to despair.

In truth, the influence of the Spirit rushes not like a continual torrent, but flows as a gentle river, which, indeed, for the most part, displays its silver surface in the meadows, but may sometimes conceal itself, without being lost, in a subterranean channel.

While we retain faith, hope, and charity, and while we seek the favour of God in fervent prayer, we have every reason to believe that GRACE abounds in us, though we should not, for a considerable time, time, be favoured with the livelier experience of its immediate energy. If we persevere in a virtuous course, we may rest assured that God will, at all proper intervals, and for our reward and encouragement, shew us the light of his countenance.

Let the pious Christian remember, that HOPE is placed, in the celebrated enumeration of Christian virtues, next to faith, and before charity. Let him, therefore, take care not to indulge the least tendency to such melancholy ideas of desertion as may lead to despair. God will not behold a sincerely contrite heart, anxious to find grace, without affording it; and though, for wise purposes of trial, it is possible that he may not, for a short time, bestow it in its more sensible influences, yet there is every reason to believe, that he who sincerely grieves because he thinks himself less favoured by the Holy Spirit than usual, is, on that very account, (I mean, because he grieves,) in a STATE OF GRACE, and therefore safe.

SECTION XXXV.

Of the Doctrine that the Operations of the Holy Spirit are NEVER distinguishable from the Operations of our own Minds.

INGENIOUS and philosophical divines, desirous of discouraging, to the utmost of their power, all fanciful pretensions to the guidance of the Holy Spirit, have boldly affirmed that its influence is not

not to be distinguished from the ordinary operations of the human mind. Their endeavour to prevent the evils of a wild imagination deserves praise; but they should be cautious of misrepresenting the effects of divine agency, and denying truth, with a design of obviating error.

From the plain and repeated accounts of scripture, it appears that this divine agency produces a very great alteration in the mind; a much greater than could be produced by its own natural operations. It is God that worketh in you, saith St. Paul, both to will and to do of his good pleasure*.

I speak with the utmost diffidence, when I say it appears probable that energy so powerful is sometimes distinguishable from the spontaneous operations of the mind. I am sensible that the doctrine may open a door to fanatical extravagance; but if it is the true doctrine, it ought to be maintained, whatever may be the consequences.

The influence of the Holy Ghost is represented in scripture as consolatory. When a good man, in deep affliction, feels, in consequence of his prayer and devotion, a spring of comfort flowing upon his mind, such as no reasoning of his own, no external circumstances, no condolence of his friends could produce, is there not reason to believe that the influence of God's Holy Spirit is upon him, and that it is distinguishable from his own thoughts and imagination? The operations of his own mind lead only to horror and dismay; but a light rises up in the darkness; and is it not easy to perceive that this unexpected radiance is the day-spring from on high?

* Phil. ii. 13.

When

When the pious Christian, employed in fervent prayer, finds himself full of holy joy and humble confidence, and feels his heart melt within him, overflowing with love of God and charity to man, is there not more presumption in attributing this state to the mere operations of his own mind, than to the God of spirits, actually dispensing to believers that grace or favour which he has promised in the gospel ?

When temptations to sin assault with violence, and a man feels himself strengthened, so as to be able to overcome, at the very moment of his intended surrender, shall he erect the victorious trophies to his own virtue ? His own reason and resolution had betrayed him, the operations of his own unassisted mind tended to concession ; but God gave him strength from his holy place, and to God only is due the praise.

Innumerable are the circumstances and situations in life, in which comfort, illumination, protection, and strength are afforded in a degree and manner, which it is much more unreasonable to think could be produced by the mere operations of the mind, than that they were supplied by the author and giver of all good.

In making the distinction between the operations of the Holy Spirit and those of the human mind, the wisest men will ever be obnoxious to mistake. The weak, wicked, and hypocritical may deceive themselves or others in it, to the injury or offence of many. But still the inconveniences of this perversion cannot entirely justify divines in their confidential and repeated assertions, that since the extraordinary gifts of the Spirit, such as were bestowed on the apostles, have ceased, the operations of the Holy Ghost on the mind are in no instance or degree to be distinguished from the mind's own operations. These assertions approach nearly to an entire denial of the doctrine: a very dangerous and impious blasphemy*.
or

* “Nam si tota Dei ætias consistit in clarâ evangelii propositione, opportunè factâ, cur omnipotentia ad id requiritur? Quorsum adhibentur a PAULO magnificæ illæ voces, ad describendam, quam exierit Deus in nobis, omnipotentiam, Eph. i. 18, 19. quum dicit esse υπερβαλλον μεγαλης δυναμεις et κατα την ενεργειαν του κρατους της ισχυος.”—For if the whole of the interposition of God consists in the clear proposal of the Gospel, opportunely made, why is omnipotence required for it? Why are those magnificent expressions applied by St. Paul to describe the omnipotence which God exerts in us? “The eyes of your understanding being enlightened, that ye may know what is the exceeding greatness of his power to us ward, who believe according to the working of his mighty power.”To assert that the power of God working in us, differs not perceptibly from the ordinary powers of man. “Annon hoc est ætionem omnipotentem Dei obscurare et in nihilum ferme redigere?”—Is not this to extenuate the almighty energy of God, and almost to reduce it to nothing? TURRETIN.

It may here be asked, What man can judge infallibly of that which passes in the mind of another? Yet many RATIONAL divines dogmatically declare to their disciples, that it is impossible, in any circumstances, to distinguish the energy of God's grace on their hearts, from the common and natural workings of the passions and imagination. This is to assume a power of discernment which belongs to him only, to “whom all hearts are open, and from whom no secrets are hidden.”

To what strange absurdities may even good men and great divines be carried, when they are extolling human REASON, in order, as they pretend, and I believe, think, to discourage fanaticism! Thus the great Tillotson says:

YOU DO NOT FIND IT ANY WHERE REVEALED IN ALL THE SCRIPTURES THAT THERE IS A GOD.

TILLOTSON'S Sermons, quoted by Dr. EDWARDS.

Again. “We have not (from the Scriptures) infallible assurance that there is a God.” See the Quotation in Dr. EDWARDS'S Preacher, v. 1. p. 150.

This example should make the rational divines of the present day a little cautious in deriding or despising other men's conviction, whencesoever it may arise.

SECTION XXXVI.

Of devotional Feelings or SENTIMENTS.

THE pious devotee has exposed himself to the derision of the scorner, by talking of spiritual feelings which he could not accurately describe ; and the reality of which can never be proved by external testimony.

But I know not why the word feeling, which, in this age, is applied to all occasions, should not be applied to religion *. The lover, the artist, the connoisseur enlarge upon the acuteness of their feelings in the contemplation of the excellence they admire. The man of delicacy is for ever boasting of his fine feelings, and the beautiful embarrassment which they create. The spectator in a theatre, the hearer at a concert, expatiates on the effect which the spectacle and the music have produced on his feelings ; and shall not he who contemplates the universe, and adores the maker of it, and of those powers by which he both adores

* Why should religion be the only subject on which we are not allowed to FEEL ? Men are praised for the exercise of ardour, and even of ecstasy in poetry, in politics, and in the endearing connections of social life ; but in religion, we must either go on with cool indifference, or be branded as enthusiasts. Is it because religion is of less importance than other things ? Is eternal salvation of less consequence than the political or domestic accommodations of time ? It is treated by multitudes as if it were ; and the spirit of Socinianism, so far as it operates, tends to keep them in countenance. Is it not a pity but those who call themselves rational Christians, would act more rationally ? Nothing can be more irrational, as well as injurious, than to encourage an ardour of mind after the trifles of a moment, and to discourage it when pursuing objects of infinite magnitude.

“ Passion is reason, transport temper here.”

FULLER.

and

and contemplates, shall not he be allowed to feel; and when his bosom glows with love, gratitude, and devotion, shall his pretensions to feelings be stigmatized as the delirious language of a wild enthusiasm * ?

The frigid temper of scholastic theology would deny the reality of every thing which, from its own defect of sensibility, it never yet experienced.

That the Divine Spirit, operating on the mind, should cause in it a SERENITY, a tranquillity, a comfort, which no words can express, is highly credible; when a thousand inferior agents, or causes, are able to produce emotions of various kinds; gentle or violent, painful or pleasing. But well-meaning divines, endeavouring to explode those extravagant pretensions to feeling, which have deluded the vulgar, disturbed society, and driven many to madness, have denied the possibility of such SENTIMENTS, and attributed them entirely to the force of fancy, to folly, and to hypocrisy. They deserved praise for their endeavour to prevent evil; but by exceeding the bounds of truth in their censure, they prevented good at the same time. For their doctrines unintentionally taught men to neglect the benign seasons of grace, and to confound the holy assistance of heaven with the mere

* That elegant mathematician, deep philosopher, and excellent man, DANIEL BERNOUILLI, said, that, when reading the wonderful discoveries of Sir Isaac Newton, " his mind has sometimes " been so overpowered by THRILLING EMOTIONS, that he has " wished that moment to be the last, and that it was this which " gave him the clearest conception of the happiness of heaven."

And cannot the contemplation of the CAUSE OF CAUSES be allowed to excite WARM FEELINGS in the bosom, when the happy conjectures of human sagacity are able to excite in the cold bosom of a mathematician, THRILLING emotions?

operations

operations of the human mind. They allow that the scripture plainly speaks of heavenly influence ; but they boldly assert, that it can NEVER be distinguished from the ordinary actings of natural sentiment, intellect, passion, and imagination.

The word feelings, in religion, has been treated with such contempt and ridicule, that the truth respecting them, is in danger of suffering, without a fair examination. Such is the force of words and prepossession. But let the word be changed to the synonymous term, SENTIMENT, and then let any one object, with solid argument, to giving the name of religious sentiment to that pious, virtuous, pure state of mind, which is caused by the influence of the Holy Ghost, in the happy hour when God, in his mercy, showers it down, more abundantly than usual, on the human bosom.

But, on this topic, great caution is required ; for men, especially the ignorant and passionate, are prone to attribute their own dreams and emotions to demoniacal or celestial impressions. Such a persuasion leads to spiritual pride *, to a perseverance in error and vice, to cruelty, and to persecution. He who is acquainted with ecclesiastical history, will recollect many dreadful examples of false feelings, and pretended inspiration. The deluded and deluding persons have represented themselves as prophets, new Messiahs, and even as God ; and what is more extraordinary, they have persuaded many to believe them, and have conducted a willing multitude to whatever mischief their zealous hearts erroneously conceived.

* False religion is always ostentatious. Its object is to be noticed, admired, revered. When men talk of their FEELINGS, there is reason to suspect vanity, hypocrisy, or knavery. It is justly said, NON EST RELIGIO, UBI OMNIA PATENT.

While,

While, therefore, a conviction that there is indeed a religious SENTIMENT, or a divine and holy feeling, which impresses the heart more forcibly than any argument, induces me to maintain so important a truth; I must, in the most anxious and importunate terms, express my desire that none may teach, and none submit to be taught, a belief, at this period, in EXTRAORDINARY inspiration or grace given to any one man exclusively.

All spiritual pride, all cruelty, all persecution, are, in their nature, repugnant to the Spirit of grace: and though they probably proceed from strong feelings, they are feelings arising from passion, fancy, and actual insanity. Whoever is under their influence, must have recourse to the SPIRIT OF GRACE, that his feelings or sentiments may become all gentle, benevolent, peaceable, and humble. If his extravagancies still continue to carry him to injurious actions and disorderly behaviour, application must be made to the physician, or, in cases of extremity, to the civil magistrate.

There can be nothing in the genuine SENTIMENT, or feelings, occasioned by the Spirit of God, which is not friendly to man, improving to his nature, and co-operating with all that sound philosophy and benignant laws have ever done to advance the happiness of the human race, and strengthen the bands of society*.

* Dr. John Tottie, canon of Christchurch, a most elegant scholar and sound divine, addresses the students of the university of Oxford, on the subject of the Spirit's influence, thus: in a sermon on "The wind bloweth where it listeth," &c.

"The same kind of operation hath the Spirit of God. The inspiration of it flows like the soft and warm breezes of the air. It refreshes the soul with peaceful and pleasing thoughts; it keeps the conscience pure and undefiled, and preserves it from the pestilential contagion of sin. All this may be PERCEIVED and FELT. We shall FEEL and confess the enlivening presence of this Holy Spirit, in the peace of conscience, in an unruffled composure
"and

SECTION XXXVII.

Of Enthusiasm.

ENTHUSIASM is commonly used and understood in a bad sense; but if its real meaning * be attended to, it may certainly admit of a very fine one. It means a consciousness or persuasion that the Deity is actually present, by an immediate emanation or impulse on the mind of the enthusiast; the reality of which, in certain cases, is the doctrine of the church and of the gospel; a doctrine sufficiently consonant to reason, and not necessarily connected with self-delusion, folly, madness, or fanaticism †.

“ and serenity of mind, in having a delight in virtue, in the possession of all those Christian graces that purify and refine the soul, in the assurance of God’s favour, and in hopes full of immortality.”
 “ These effects the pious and good Christian, who is led by the Spirit, does MOST UNDOUBTEDLY FEEL.”

To this sermon before the university of Oxford, June 1st, 1766, the same excellent divine adds :

“ No man can be a real Christian who has not an intimate union with the DIVINE SPIRIT.”

The whole of this sermon is well worth attention. It is to be found in the first volume of a large collection of sermons, intitled, “ Family Lectures.” He represents the subject of feelings or religious sentiments in the true light.—He says, they consist in the comfort and refreshment which they give the soul. He justly reprobates, as evidences of the Spirit, all feelings which are occasioned by the passionate emotions of an overheated imagination or enthusiastick phrenzy.

* ENΘΕΟΣ.

† RELIGIOUS ENTHUSIASM is not blameable, when it is a strong persuasion, a firm belief, of a continual operation, impression and influence from above; when it is a total resignation to, and dependence upon, the immediate inspiration and guidance of the Holy Spirit in the whole course of our lives; this is as sober and rational a belief, as to believe that we always “ live, and move, and have our being in God.”

LAW.

But

But because many have made pretensions to the privilege of God's immediate presence in their hearts, whose lives and conduct gave reason to suspect that they were not thus favoured, the word enthusiasm, which, in common language, expressed their false pretensions, has fallen into disgrace, and now often implies no more than the idea of a bigot or a devotee, weakly deluded by the fond visions of a disordered imagination.

But let not enthusiasm of the better kind, a modest confidence of being assisted, as the gospel promises, by the agency of the Holy Spirit, be involved in undeserved disgrace *. We are taught that

* “GRATIA IMMEDIATA, qualis ab orthodoxis docetur, nihil habet commune cum enthusiasmo, sed diversimodè ab eo differt.”

“1. Enthusiasmus novas quærit Revelationes extra verbum; sed GRATIA IMMEDIATA nullas, quia verbum semper comitatur, nec aliud agit, quàm ut illud menti imprimat.”

“2. In enthusiasmo, objecta quæ menti imprimuntur non extrinsecus adveniunt, sed intus a Spiritu per arcanas inspirationes suggeruntur. Sed hic objectum supponitur semper extrinsecus advenire et ex verbo peti.”

“3. Enthusiasmus fit per subitos motus, qui ipsum discursum et ratiocinationem anteverunt, et sæpe excludunt. Sed Spiritus operatio non excludit, sed secum trahit ratiocinationem et gratum voluntatis consensum.”

“Deniquè, ne plura discrimina jam persequamur, enthusiasmus non infert cordis mutationem; et mentem afficit, IMMUTATA sæpe mente VOLUNTATE; unde in IMPIOS etiam cadit, ut in Balaamo et aliis visum; sed OPERATIO GRATIÆ necessariò infert cordis mutationem et sanctitatis studium.”—

Immediate Grace, as the doctrine is taught by the orthodox, has nothing in common with enthusiasm, but differs from it in various respects.

1. Enthusiasm seeks new revelations extrinsic to the written word; but immediate Grace seeks none that are new, because it always accompanies the word, and aims at nothing more than to impress the word more forcibly on the mind.

2. According to the tenets of enthusiasm, objects which are impressed on the mind come not from any thing external, but are suggested within by the Spirit and by secret inspiration. But here (in the case of immediate Grace), the object is always supposed to come from that the Divinity resides in the pure heart. The belief of it is indeed enthusiasm, but it is enthusiasm of the noble, the virtuous, the necessary kind. The ardour which it inspires is laudable. Like that of all other good things, the corruption and abuse of it is productive of great evil; but still it is not itself to be exploded.

There is, indeed, a cold philosophy, which seems to discourage all the warm sentiments of affection, and will hardly allow them in any thing which concerns religion. It aims at reducing theology to a scholastic science, and would willingly descant on the love of God, and the sublimest discoveries of the gospel, in the same frigidity of temper as it would explain the metaphysics of Aristotle. But there is natural and laudable ardour in the mind of man, whenever it contemplates magnificent objects; and which is certainly to be expected, when that object is the Lord God omnipotent, and the human soul, a particle of Deity, aspiring at reunion with the Supreme Being, and meditating on immortality.

Is there not an ardour of enthusiasm, which admires and produces excellence in the arts of mu-from something external, and indeed to be sought from the written word.

3. Enthusiasm is caused by sudden emotions, which precede all reasoning of discourse, and sometimes exclude them entirely. But the operation of the Spirit does not exclude, but takes with it, reasoning and the ready consent of the will.

4. Lastly, not to pursue any farther distinctions, enthusiasm does not produce a change in the heart, but affects the understanding, leaving the will unaltered; whence it happens that enthusiasm may exist in wicked men, as it appears to have done in the instance of Balaam and others; but the operation of Grace necessarily produces a change in the heart and a love of holiness.

TURRETIN.

This author here speaks of enthusiasm in its vulgar sense—which is certainly a DISEASE; a mental FEVER, attended with delirium.

fic,

fic, painting, and poetry *? And shall it be allowed in the humble province of imitative skill, and exploded in contemplating the GREAT ARCHETYPE of all; the source of life, beauty, order, grandeur, and sublimity? Shall I hear a symphony, or behold a picture, a statue, or a fine prospect, with rapture, and at the same time consider God, who made both the object and the sense that perceives it, with the frigid indifference of scholastic philosophy? Shall I meditate on heaven, hell, death, and judgment, with all the coolness with which a lawyer draws a formal instrument, an arithmetician computes a sum, or a logician forms a syllogism in mood and figure?

Such coolness, on such subjects, arises not from superiority of wisdom, but from pride and affectation, from acquired callosity or natural insensibility of temper. God has bestowed on man a liveliness of fancy, and a warmth of affection, as well as an accuracy and acuteness of reason and intellect; he has bestowed a HEART vibrating with the tender chords of love and pity, as well as a brain furnished with fibres adapted to subtle disquisition.

The Scriptures afford many examples of a laudable and natural enthusiasm. My heart was hot within me, says David; and the warm poetry of

* “ You need not go to a cloyster, the cell of a monk, or to a field preacher to see enthusiasts; they are every where, at balls, at masquerades, at court, and at the exchange; they sit in all coffee-houses, and cant in all assemblies.”

What greater enthusiasts than infidels, who write voluminous works merely to display their abilities in destroying systems which at the same time they acknowledge to be beneficial.

Two thirds of the New Testament must appear to the mathematical divines, rank enthusiasm. Some of them, just from the schools of Cambridge, seem inclined to study theology with a pair of compasses, a rule, and a line. What must they say when they come to such passages as this, “ that ye might be filled with all the fulness of God?” Is not the being filled with God enthusiasm? Eph. iii. 19.

the psalms, the rapturous style of prophecy, are proofs that those who have been singularly favoured by God, were of tempers which the modern philosophers would call enthusiastical. Their fire was kindled at the altar. St. John was a burning and a shining light. St. Paul was avowedly of an ardent temper, and a glowing imagination; nor did our Saviour himself express his sentiments in the cold language of the Aristotelian school, but with emphasis and pathos.

They who rail at enthusiasm, in general terms, and without making a due distinction between the scriptural and the false kind, consist either of those who laudably endeavour to discredit the pretensions of the hypocrite, and the weak brother; or of those who, from their speculative habits, their cold tempers, or irreligious lives, labour to discountenance all pretensions to an excellence and purity, which they never felt, and to which they could not rise.

Whoever believes what the scriptures indisputably affirm, that the body is the TEMPLE OF THE HOLY SPIRIT, and that he actually resides in it, when it is purified sufficiently for his reception, is so far an ENTHUSIAST: but let him glory in the appellation; for he is such an one as every Christian, who thinks and feels in conformity to the gospel he professes, must be of necessity. If he denies the agency of the Spirit of God on the soul of man, he denies the most important doctrine of revelation, and must be a stranger to its finest effects on the human bosom.

But since such is the case, let those who very laudably write against enthusiasm* of the false kind,

* There is an old saying, "Give a dog an ill name, and they'll hang him." Thus also, give the doctrine of grace, though plainly EVANGELICAL,

kind, take care not to confound truth with falsehood; and not to proceed to such an extreme in refuting the pretensions of hypocrites, fools, or knaves, as to infringe on the genuine and sublime doctrine of grace, the glory of the everlasting gospel.

SECTION XXXVIII.

Cautions concerning Enthusiasm.

So many and so melancholy are the effects of mistaken and excessive enthusiasm, recorded in the annals of mankind, that wise men are justly alarmed at every appearance of it, and little inclined to give it indulgence.

Whatever there has been of savage cruelty, whatever of public violence, and tumult, and confusion, the utmost extremes of all these evils, in all their consequences, have been equalled by the frantic extravagance of false enthusiasm. It has exhibited, in some tempers, all the symptoms of a malignant disease, and terminated, at last, in real and most deplorable insanity.

If then it be wisdom to obviate the approaches of distemper, those men have evinced themselves

EVANGELICAL, the name of ENTHUSIASM or METHODISM, and a very great part of mankind will immediately explode it, without the slightest examination.

The name of methodist has been given to all the clergy, who preach or profess the doctrines of the reformation, as expressed in the articles, homilies, and liturgy of the church, to which they have solemnly assented and consented, in the presence of God and man.

wife, who have laboured to discourage, by all the arts of ridicule and argument, the earliest tendencies among the people to religious phrenzy. There are innocent follies, and there is a madness, which is only the object of compassion; but the folly and madness of the bigot are detestable, because they are destructive as a pestilence. Against such an enemy to human happiness, philosophy has urged her best reason, justice has unsheathed her sword, and the stage, to complete the triumph, has played all the batteries of derision.

But argumentation, coercive force, and even ridicule, have been found ineffectual. All these are classed, by the bigot, under the term persecution; and persecution, like a current of air, adds violence to fire. The gentler, the kinder, the more Christian mode of expostulation and rational concession, wherever concession can be made, may, like a balsamic vulnerary, heal the sore which opposition would cause to rankle.

I therefore do not deny the justice of the enthusiast's pretensions, who professes himself actuated by a belief that the Holy Spirit condescends to assist him in virtuous endeavours, by a sacred influence from Heaven. But I caution him against entertaining, for a moment, the presumptuous idea, that the same Spirit which assists him, does not, with equal readiness and efficacy, assist his pious neighbour also, and all sincere believers, throughout Christendom, however distinguished by sect, church, or persuasion*.

I urge him to try his spirit by the infallible touchstone of scripture. Is it pure, is it peaceable, is it gentle, easy to be entreated, full of mercy

* The fault of the methodists seems to be, that they arrogate to themselves EXCLUSIVE privileges of grace.

and

and good fruits, without partiality, and without hypocrisy *? If it should be deficient in any of these amiable qualities, let him be cautious of indulging it, lest the spirit should be of a diabolical, and not of a heavenly nature.

And in what manner is he to form a judgment of himself, since the heart is deceitful, and to know oneself is the most difficult of sciences? If his high pretensions are accompanied with a bad life; if he be disposed to contend with rancour and violence in support of his pretensions; if he be disposed to involve all who think differently from him in perdition; if he decry good works; and if, with every appearance of sanctity, and many external acts of piety and benevolence, he reserves to himself some secret and favourite vice, he may rest assured, that the spirit which actuates him is not from above.

If he be inclined to neglect, despise, and revile decent and useful ordinances, such as are countenanced by scripture, and have a direct tendency to preserve peace, benevolence, and piety; if he prefer himself to all regular and learned ministers, whether in the establishment or out of it, and preach to ignorant and deluded multitudes in the fields, with the air and voice of phrenzy, he may have just reason to fear, though he should have ten thousand in his train, that he has carried his pretensions to the Spirit beyond that wisdom, moderation, and love of order, which the Author of our religion taught, both by precept and example.

If, in his writings, he apply the scriptural language to himself, and assume the authority of a primitive apostle; if, at the same time, he express his ideas in such a manner as to excite the laughter and contempt of men of sense and approved goodness, he may infer that his spiritual pride has hurried him to the verge of insanity; and, as he values his health and happiness, should exert himself to remove the febrile symptoms, which are at once contagious and fatal.

* James, iii. 17.

When mechanics, of confined education, and not remarkable for natural discernment, or peculiar virtue and goodness, think themselves better able to instruct the people*, than a numerous class of their fellow-citizens, who have been separated, from their youth, for sacred offices, instructed in learning of various kinds, versed in the original languages of scripture; the very idea implies so great a degree of pride and self-conceit, that it cannot come from the gentle, unassuming spirit of Him who was himself meek and lowly, and who everywhere taught his disciples the lesson of humility.

If such persons urge, in defence of their extravagant behaviour, their dereliction of their trades and daily labours, and their assumption of the priest's office, a particular CALL, from Heaven itself, louder than reaches the ears of others; let them, before they believe themselves, or persuade others, produce, as a credential of their commission, a miracle. If they find themselves utterly unable to do this, let them return to the workshop and warehouse, renounce the deceitful spirit, and evince their attainment of the true, by humility,

* I will never join in what has been called St. Austin's Litany.

A logicâ libera nos, Domine.—From sound reasoning, good Lord, deliver us.

One may reprobate the proud pretensions of the boasting rationalist, who would subject revelation to his own reason, without at the same time encouraging or approving the nonsense of a ranter.

charity,

charity, modesty, and obedience to lawful superiors; by a study to be quiet, and an attention to their own business.

From such practices, and such persons as I have alluded to, has arisen much of the disgrace which has fallen on true and laudable enthusiasm, or that wisdom which is infused into the pure, gentle, and charitable heart from above. False enthusiasm * should be discouraged, that true religion may grow and flourish; as the weed should be plucked up, to give room for the wholesome plant to strike root, expand itself in foliage and blossoms, and produce good fruit in abundance.

* "There is," says Bishop Horne, "in the present times, a temptation which lies very hard on some, and either does so much mischief, or hinders so much good, that it is a dreadful snare, and I wish I could guard my younger brethren against it; I mean, the FEAR OF BEING SUSPECTED OF FALSE PIETY. It can never be sufficiently lamented, that the practice of devotion and the DOCTRINE OF GRACE, so essential to the Gospel, should have fallen into DISREPUTE, from the example of any persons, who have been discovered to have acted a Godly part for mercenary purposes. But God forbid that the hypocrisy of others should lead us into lukewarmness and indifference, which are equally bad. Never let it be supposed, THAT CHRISTIANS CAN SERVE GOD, WITHOUT THE GRACE OF GOD, because some have been so weak as to forfeit the wife with the presumption and folly of their spiritual pretensions. THE LIFE OF DEVOTION IS STILL THE GIFT OF GOD; and it must be insisted upon, with our church, that there is not in man one good thought, one holy desire, but from the continual inspiration of the divine Spirit, in all things directing and ruling our hearts. WITHOUT THIS DOCTRINE we may be scholars and critics, and men of TASTE; we may be monitors and moralists of civil society; but we are no longer to be considered as CHRISTIAN divines, neither will our labours be attended with any saving effect."

Bishop HORNE's Charge to the Clergy of Norwich.

SECTION XXXIX.

Of being RIGHTEOUS overmuch.

IT seems to be very doubtful, whether the scriptural phrase of being righteous overmuch, signifies that sort of excess which methodists and fanatics are apt to indulge. I am rather induced to believe, that it means an extreme rigour in exacting from others an unerring rectitude. "Be not righteous overmuch; why shouldst thou destroy thyself?" That is, "Establish not, by thy severity, a rule so strict as must, if put in force against thyself, involve thee, imperfect as thou art, in destruction." The prohibition seems to me to quadrate with the old observation, that justice in the extreme is extreme injustice †.

There are other interpretations of the words at least as probable as that which confines it to the over-sanctity of the methodist or bigot.

The ingenious and pious Dr. Trapp has taken the words in the latter sense, and written, with great force of argument, against the extravagances of methodism. Perhaps the words of his text did not properly authorize him in deriving the doctrine from them which he has laid down; but, whether they did or not, he doubtless had reason on his side, when he endeavoured to explode all superstitious excesses which are subversive of true religion, injurious to society, and painful, without advantage, to the deluded individual ‡.

Philo-

* Eccles. vii. 16. † Summum jus, summa injuria.

‡ "But let it be remembered, that no virtue has any blameable EXTREME in it, till it contradicts the general end of religion, till it hinders

Philosophers, by the light of nature, discovered, in the earliest ages, the wisdom of avoiding extremes; and no precepts are more common than those which recommend the golden mediocrity. These were undoubtedly suggested by actual experience, and a careful study of the human constitution. If they are just and proper, when applied to philosophy, there is every reason to think them equally so when applied to religion, which is the perfection of philosophy. Excess, in the very name, implies culpability, even when the things, in which it appears, are of a virtuous and laudable nature.

So that whoever advances his virtues beyond the line of rectitude, errs no less than he who stops, at an equal interval, on this side of it. Yet, at the same time, I must observe, that there is something far more noble and generous in errors of excess than of defect; and the virulence which has been shewn in reviling the poor methodist, who has been tormenting himself * with superfluous austerities, seems to me to arise from a want of good-nature and charity, far more criminal than the mistaken discipline of a zealous devotee.

“ hinders the RESTORATION of the divine Image in us, or makes “ us less fit to appear among the inhabitants of heaven. Abstinence, “ temperance, mortification of the senses and passions, can have NO EXCESS “ till they hinder the purification of the soul, and make the body less “ useful and subservient to it. Charity can have no EXCESS till it “ contradicts that love which we are to have in heaven, till it goes “ beyond the command of loving our neighbour as we love ourselves,
 “ and till it forgets that our own life is to be preserved.”

Answer to Dr. TRAPP's Discourse.

* The poor Heautontimorumenos, with his pale emaciated figure, is certainly not an object of ridicule, and ought, at least, to be forgiven, by the plump pluralist and dignitary gorging the tithe pig, and washing it down with the choicest wines of Portugal and France.

Those among the methodists who are sincere in their rigid self-denial, and in all the active and passive virtues of their persuasion, are certainly objects of kindness and compassion, rather than of severe animadversion.

The church, and the protestant dissenters, it appears, teach the doctrine of grace; a doctrine which, I believe, the methodists consider as of the first moment; and for the sake of attending to which with more earnestness, they seceded from the church and meeting-house to the tabernacle. Their preachers, they found, were used to dwell upon that subject, more than on any others; and with a degree of vehemence not usual or approved by men of more learning, moderation, and humility. They were caught by the sound, and taught to hate both the church and all regular ministers with a hatred truly unchristian. The church and the ministers *, it seems, were not sufficiently holy for their purpose. The church, and the ministers did not preach the gospel in its purity; and neither its doctrine nor its discipline were, in their opinions, sufficiently strict and severe.

The dissemination of such ideas may answer the ends of self-appointed leaders, who wish to increase their importance, by drawing a multitude after them. Accusation will generally be heard with attention. Pretensions to superior holiness is one of the most successful means of deceit. The multitude are attracted by these, and a thousand other arts, co-operating with the natural tendency which they feel to superstition and fanaticism. They thus become self-tormentors; lose most of the comforts, and neglect many of the duties of life.

* When these become the mere tools of statesmen, all religious people are offended, and one of the pillars of the state is shaken.

In

In the church of England, their favourite doctrine of grace ought to be preached in the manner which both reason, scripture, and experience best approve; for the doctrine of grace is most fully declared to be the doctrine of the church of England; and if the ministers are reluctant to preach it in all its force, it is from a fear of falling into the sin and disgrace of over-much righteousness. It is the humble endeavour of my treatise on this subject, to stimulate preachers to enlarge on the doctrine of grace; and by those means to bring back the numerous sheep who have strayed from their flock. There is the sort of food in which the sheep will shew that they delight, if the shepherds will but bring it forth; and indeed there is little doubt but that most of them do, on some occasions: but if the sheep hunger and thirst after more than they usually receive, the good shepherd will not in future fail to open all the stores with which the scriptures abundantly supply him.

With respect to doctrine, the over-righteous Christian, as he is now called, will thus have no cause to complain of defect in the church; and with respect to moral discipline, it is very certain that self-denial, mortification, fasting, active beneficence, and all Christian perfection, are, for the most part, taught by the church and her ministers, with great force of argument and authority. Every Christian may carry the moral discipline of his religion to whatever lengths his conscience or inclination may urge him.

It must be confessed, that such is the moderation of the church and her pastors in the PRESENT AGE, that the duties which they teach are not urged with that unnatural rigour which precludes the rational enjoyment of life. It is a cheerful church, and for that reason the more estimable. It requires no excessive austerity. It aims at assisting poor erring mortals in overcoming their weakness and misery; but it does not add to them, by requiring the sacrifice of health, ease, peace, society, cheerfulness, and innocent gaiety. It does not condemn those, with whom it cannot agree in opinion, with uncharitable severity. It is gentle and candid; it is accommodated to such a creature as man, for ever aiming at good, but, from weakness, continually relapsing into some degree of evil. It does not, like the severe system of the over-righteous, inflame and aggravate the wounds of its patients, but, with lenient balsamics, assuages their anguish*.

And if the over-righteous object that regularly-bred ministers want vehemence and earnestness, I affirm that the objection cannot be universally well-founded. Men, having various degrees of talents, and various degrees of sensibility, will have a correspondent variety in their modes of delivery. The lively by nature, with very little sense of religion, may be animated in their discourses; the dull by nature, with a meaning very honest and pious, will be poor orators. And it always happens, in a very large body of men, that some are idle and irreligious; though circumstances may have led them to assume a profession where carelessness and impiety are doubly culpable. But such is the present state of human nature. He who demands more perfection than experience has ever yet found, is unreasonable and over-righteous. If some men have less pretension, and less vehemence, than those who are called the OVER-

* By the CHURCH I wish to be understood all those who are united to Christ by the Holy Ghost, wherever they dwell, and by whatever denomination they are distinguished. The WORLD, in the scriptural sense, consists of all who are not so united.

RIGHTEOUS,

RIGHTEOUS, they have probably less hypocrisy, less folly, and less spiritual arrogance. Over-righteousness, with all its pretensions to humility, is often the parent as well as the child of pride.

After all, let us remember, that there is an under-righteousness (if I may use the term) as well as an over-righteousness; and that mankind are much apter to err from defect than excess. While hypocrisy and fanaticism are avoided, let us not, in the present times, be alarmed at danger from excessive piety.

SECTION XL:

All extravagant and selfish Pretensions to the Spirit to be anxiously avoided, as they proceed from and cherish Pride, and are frequently accompanied with Immorality.

OSTENTATIOUSLY to pretend to greater portions of the Spirit than others, is alone a very unfavourable symptom, as it is a presumptive proof of two wants, not compatible with the Spirit's benignant influence: the want of humility, and the want of charity. It is no wonder, therefore, that those who have made such pretensions, have disgraced them by the wickedness of their lives; and have induced ill-judging men hastily to consider the whole doctrine of divine assistance as a mere delusion*.

* The phrases, being Godded with God, Christed with Christ, and others equally absurd, adopted by fanatics of the last century, have given just offence to men of sense and sincerity; but disgust is apt to run into extremes, and like the loathing occasioned by sickness, to cause a rejection of wholesome aliment.

Hypocrites,

Hypocrites, in fanatical times, when the appearance of extraordinary piety was conducive to advancement in wealth and honours, were sure to go farther in their pretensions, than the modesty of true professors could permit or excuse : but that deceitfulness of heart which produces hypocrisy, leads to all other bad conduct ; and religion has been disgraced by the singular profligacy of ostentatious professors.

Knives of the very worst kind, who have no other object than to avail themselves of the credulity of others, are likely at all times to put on a cloak and a mask, which may render them externally respectable, and facilitate their purposes of deceit. Nothing seduces the ignorant and unexperienced so easily as the appearance of extraordinary sanctity ; and nothing has been more frequently assumed, for the accomplishment of ambitious and avaricious designs. When these designs have been accomplished, the cloak and the mask have been thrown aside as useless incumbrances, and the villain has stood forth in his proper shape and colour.

Men of weak heads and warm hearts have proceeded to the most extravagant lengths in pretensions to sanctity ; and at the same time, from the want of solid virtue, have fallen into deplorable sins. Their sins derived additional deformity in the eyes of the people, from the contrast of assumed sanctity ; and the world was ready to exclaim that all religion must be vain, if, in men who display so much of it, it contributes so little to wisdom and virtue.

Great sinners, unwilling to tread the rugged road of virtue, have thought it an easier and pleasanter mode of avoiding the consequences of their enormities, to persuade themselves of sudden conversions, versions, and peculiar favour from heaven ; and to compensate for inward impurity by outward sanctity, and for disobedience in things essential, by intemperate zeal in things indifferent, formal, and merely ostentatious.

Thus spiritual pride, want of charity, hypocrisy, knavery, folly, and extreme wickedness, have given rise to extraordinary pretensions to the Spirit, and verified the observation, that the wickedest of mankind have been among those who displayed the appearance of goodness and piety in the EXTREME.

“ The gradation has been,” (says Dr. Trapp,) “ righteous overmuch in practice—righteous over-“ much in practice and doctrine—immoral and “ profligate in both ; and this still with pretensions
 “ to extraordinary measures of the Holy Spirit.”

But to what should a conviction of this truth lead the sober Christian ? Certainly not to deny the doctrine of supernatural assistance, which he finds in the gospel ; but to avoid all extravagance of pretension, all boasting, all over-righteousness, all preference of himself to others, on account of spiritual gifts, lest he should ultimately find himself also deceived and a deceiver.

The religion of Christ is of a retired and reserved nature. Its most important transactions are in the recesses of the heart, and in the closet. It loves not noise nor ostentation. Let him, therefore, who wishes to know whether he really has the Spirit, examine whether his virtues and good dispositions abound in retirement, and without the least parade whatever, or the smallest applause or reward of men. If he does good privately, and avoids the eyes of admirers, I think he may entertain an humble confidence that he has the favour of God. He has, in consequence, a source of joy within him, which no man taketh away. He has the bread of life, and feeds on it in his heart by faith with thanksgiving. He is silently and unostentatiously happy, neither courting the notice of the world, nor regarding its unjust censure. He is particularly careful, that no ill-treatment shall cause him to violate the law of charity. His chief concern is to bear and yet forbear; to be rather than to seem good.
 I the

SECTION XLI.

Affected Sanctity, Demureness, Canting, Sourness, Censoriousness, ignorant and illiterate Preaching, no Marks of a State of Grace, but contribute to bring the whole Doctrine of Divine Energy into Contempt, and to diffuse Infidelity.

RELIGION is lovely. Her voice is melodious, and her aspect delightful. How has she been deformed! She has been taught to utter jargon with the hoarse croaking of the portentous raven, or to scream with the terrific howlings of the bird of night. Her face has been changed from the face of an angel to a gorgon's head, surrounded with snakes. She has been rendered a bugbear, terrifying all who approach her, instead of a gentle nursing mother, inviting wretched mortals to her fostering bosom, by the tenderest blandishments of maternal love.

Men of natural sense, improved by a learned education, and polished by all the elegancies of cultivated life, have turned from her, thus disguised as she appears, with disgust and horror.

They

They have devoted themselves to a seducing philosophy, and left religion, thus disfigured, to the gross vulgar, whom they erroneously conceived were naturally attached to the horrors of a cruel and gloomy, as well as a silly, superstition.

Is it not desirable to vindicate Christianity from such dishonour? to show that her most important doctrine, the doctrine of divine energy, leads to every disposition that is gentle, amiable, and beneficent; that it exalts, refines, and mollifies the human bosom; and while it kindles a lively and ardent hope of future felicity, improves every real enjoyment of the present life? Such a representation, and it certainly is a just one, must invite every man, who feels, as he ought, for himself or others, within the Christian pale.

The Spirit is a spirit of truth, and therefore must be adverse to all affectation of sanctity, all studied severity of aspect and demeanour, intended only to excite external respect, and to impress on the spectators, often for the sake of interest, as well as from vanity, an idea of spiritual pre-eminence. The Spirit is a loving spirit, and therefore very unlike that of the sour, censorious pretenders, who condemn all innocent amusements, and think none capable of divine favour but themselves, and those who entertain their sentiments on points perfectly indifferent in the sight of God, and of every reasonable man. The Spirit is a spirit of wisdom, which implies a due degree of knowledge and ability for every undertaking we voluntarily engage in, and therefore cannot approve the preaching of illiterate persons, who are unacquainted, not only with the languages in which the scriptures were written, but often with their own; who are fitter to be catechumens than catechists; to sit at the feet feet of Gamaliel, than to usurp his chair. Learning may not be requisite in the pious hearer, but is certainly so in every one who assumes the office of an instructor. He is not an honest man, who professes and is paid to instruct others, without having exerted himself to the utmost to procure a competent store of knowledge. The operations of the Holy Spirit, accompanying his endeavours, may make a good Christian in his private capacity; may give him faith and knowledge sufficient for his salvation; but they do not, since the time of the apostles, bestow a knowledge of languages, or qualify ALONE, without the aids of human learning, for a TEACHER of theology*.

The annals of suicide, if any such there were, and the registers of Bedlam, might bear witness to the mischiefs caused by fanatical mechanics, with strong passions and imaginations, but of feeble and narrow intellects, wildly haranguing weak and aged men and women on their lost state, on their danger of eternal damnation, and a thousand other most awful matters, which at once puzzle the understandings, and dismay the hearts of the deluded multitude. True Christianity shudders at the sufferings of well-meaning devotees, wantonly inflicted by ignorant zealots, seeking self-importance, and gratifying the pride of their hearts, as leaders of a wretched tribe, whom noise and high pretensions collect easily in every populous city, and in every poor neighbourhood, where the necessity of constant manual employment for the

* “ Ministring grace consists not in a self-appointment and designation; for no man taketh this honour to himself but he that is called of God.” Heb. v. 4, 5.—“ A promiscuous ministry and intrusion into is without call or mission, is a sacrilegious attempt on the grace of God, but is no gift of the Holy Ghost.” GLOUCESTER RIDLEY.

means

means of subsistence, precludes all contemplation, and the improvement of judgment that might result from it.

In compassion to these people, who deserve every assistance, because they certainly intend every thing that is good, though they do and suffer great evil, through defect of judgment, I wish the regular clergy, both of the established and dissenting church, to feed them with the food in which they delight—the heavenly manna, the doctrine of grace. There is no doubt but that many of them do so occasionally; but I submit it to them whether grace ought not to be a leading and principal topic in every discourse inculcating morality. I beg leave to suggest that EVANGELICAL preaching, in which the doctrine of divine energy must always make a very considerable part, would keep their congregations from wandering after men, who have no other qualification for preaching but zeal, real or pretended*; zeal without knowledge, or a knowledge confined, superficial, and unaccompanied with general charity or sound discretion. With all their defects, they do, however, preach the doctrine of grace. The people know this to be the genuine doctrine of the gospel, and therefore they flock by tens of thousands to hear it, regardless of the barbarism of the self-appointed orator, who leaves the loom and the last for the pulpit.

The pearl of great price, the common people, especially the methodists, estimate highly, however rudely it may be set; but how much more would they prize it, if it were set, adequately to

* “ They procure attention,” says Mr. Herbert, “ by earnestness of speech; it being natural to men to think that where there is much earnestness, there is something worth hearing.”

Their nonsense is generally dressed up in Scripture phrase, which gives it an air of sanctity and solemnity. It is the ass in the lion's skin.

its

its immense value, in the purest gold, by the hand of a master? If men of sound and extensive learning, of true taste and eloquence, were to recommend it, in a dignified, decorous manner, and with all the beauties of proper language, the field-preacher would rant in solitude, and the tabernacle* would be as empty as most of the parish churches in London. To the parish churches in London I refer the inquirer, who wishes to know how little the most decent and studied discourses on morality, or practical religion, for they are usually confounded, avail to attract the people. Let him leave a while his books and library, and read the volume of real life. We have had enough of

* When one sees the multitudes that throng certain tabernacles, where very weak men hold forth with scarcely any apparent recommendation but effrontery, one is almost tempted to say on the occasion, "God hath chosen the foolish things of this world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the mighty, that no flesh might glory in his presence." 1 Cor. i. 27.

These things, says the haughty court divine, are calculated for the meridian of the vulgar. But let us hear Erasmus: "Hæc, inquam, PLEBRIA, si præstarent pro sua sorte principes, si in concionibus inculcarent sacerdotes, si pueris instillarent ludimagistri, potius quam ERUDITA ILLA; non sic perpetuis pene bellis tumultuaretur undique res Christiana, non tam insano studio per fas nefasque congerendi divitias ferwerent omnia; non tot litibus ubique perstreperent sacra pariter ac profana. Denique non titulo tantum et ceremoniis differemus ab his qui Christi Philosophiam non profitentur."—But VULGAR as these things are, if men in high stations gave an example of them, as far as their stations admit, in their lives and conversations; if the clergy inculcated them in their sermons; if schoolmasters instilled them into the minds of their boys, in preference to those HIGHLY LEARNED MATTERS, with which they make such a parade;—then Christendom would not be disturbed by WARS almost without an interval of cessation;—then men would not every where be hurried on with the mad desire of heaping up riches without regard to right or wrong;—then all things, both sacred and profane, would not be every where involved in strife and confusion:—in a word, then we should be distinguished in something more essential than the mere name of Christians, and the ceremonies of the church, from those who openly and honestly avow themselves not to be professors of CHRISTIAN PHILOSOPHY." ERASMUS.

words,

words, enough of systems, enough of controversy; let us study and teach what attracts the erring multitude, what is really and efficiently useful to the mass of the people, what improves human nature, renders life as comfortable as the condition of humanity will admit, and opens a pleasing prospect, when life must be relinquished, beyond the grave.

SECTION XLII.

Bishop Lavington's Opinion respecting the Extravagancies and Follies of fanatical Preachers, and Pretenders to the Spirit.—Calmness of Temper recommended to religious Persons.—Sobriety, Moderation, and the serene Composure of a well regulated Mind.

IN the cautionary part of my work I think it expedient to represent fanaticism, in its proper shape and colours, which are truly hideous. I cannot do this more effectually than in the words of Bishop Lavington, who, while a strenuous defender of the true doctrine of grace, wrote a very able treatise on purpose to explode those absurdities which were advanced in the strange journals of Whitfield and Westley; both of them men of great abilities, and one a man of learning; but both intoxicated at one time by the flattery of multitudes, who followed in their train with a submission approaching to idolatry.

“Wherever,” says the bishop, “I find great stress laid upon some imaginary, insignificant, or unintelligible peculiarities; the word of God turned into a conjuring-book; the divine ordinances

“ nances either lightly esteemed, or imputed to “ the devil; good works either undervalued or “ trodden under foot; wild-fire dangerously tossed
 “ about, instead of that light which came down
 “ from heaven; puffing pretensions to extraordi“ nary revelations, inspirations, usurping the name
 “ of the Holy One; with personal conferences
 “ with God, face to face; enthusiastic ranters, “ comparing themselves with prophets and apos“ tles, if not with Christ himself; the most wild
 “ and extravagant behaviour, the phrenzies of a “ disturbed brain or deluded imagination, the “ effects of fits, of a weak head, or DISEASED “ BODY, all turned into so many tests and marks
 “ of saintship; the SPIRIT OF PRIDE AND VANITY “ possessing the LEADERS; a spirit of ENVY, RAN-“ COUR, broils, and implacable animosities, dash“ ing each other in pieces; a spirit of bitterness
 “ and uncharitableness towards the REST OF MAN-“ KIND; a progress through immorality, scepticism,
 “ infidelity, atheism, through spiritual desertions, “ DESPAIR, and MADNESS, made the gate of per“ fection; an IMAGINARY new-birth to be brought “ to pass by means of REAL TORTURES, of some “ of the most exquisite pangs and sufferings that “ can affect human nature:—I say, where these “ are found, and many more equally horrible, one “ may easily discern a wide difference between “ such a dispensation and GENUINE RELIGION; as “ well as the bungling hands that are substituting
 “ the former in the place of the other. One may “ easily see what strangers such inconsistent ram“ blers must be to the true devotion, as well as “ the COMFORTS of a sedate, composed piety; to “ a firm belief of our Maker and Redeemer, and “ a constant reliance upon Providence; to a steady
 “ course of sincere, habitual, and unaffected reli“ gion; to the cherishing of a warm love of God
 “ in

“ in the heart, and well-tempered zeal for the “ truths of his inspired word ; and all this PROVED “ by the love of our neighbour ; to a general ob“ servance and attendance on the MEANS OF “ GRACE, and a well-grounded hope of glory.”

From the wretched follies of fanatics, the mind turns with complacency to the gentle, benignant Spirit which guided a Bishop Wilson, a Watts, a Doddridge, a Nelson, and a Horne. Such men do honour to the doctrine of grace, and rescue it from the contempt under which it has fallen on the one hand, through the extravagance of weak devotees, and, on the other, from the *unhappy ingenuity of scholastic theologists, explaining away, to shew their skill, or to answer the political purposes of the passing hour, the strongest expressions of holy scripture.

SECTION XLIII.

Pride the great Obstacle to the general Reception of the Gospel of Grace.

A PROUD, turbulent, and vindictive spirit is utterly incompatible with the spirit of Christianity ; but a proud, turbulent, and vindictive spirit constitutes what is called, in the world, a man of honour ; and who can aspire at the distinctions and rewards which the world has to bestow, without aspiring at the character of a man of honour—without zealously maintaining it, in defiance of all which the scriptures have taught us to consider as the WILL OF GOD ? No wonder, then,

• Curiosa infelicitas :

that

that the genuine gospel, the doctrine of the SPIRIT, which is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, and easy to be entreated, should be utterly neglected by those who are more solicitous about the opinion of a few weak and wicked mortals like themselves, than about all that Christianity promises or threatens; who regard neither God nor man, when their own self-estimation is in the smallest degree depreciated *. SUBMISSION of the temper and understanding, which is necessary for the reception of that EVIDENCE of Christianity which the Holy Ghost affords, is considered as contemptible meanness, by those who are full of themselves, and live only to flatter, for the sake of being re-flattered, in the fashionable circles of self-idolizing vanity.

The doctrine of a participation with the divine nature, conceded by Heaven to the faithful and pious of low degree, is highly mortifying to those who think the perfection of human nature consists in civil nobility, in blood, or in titles conferred by an earthly monarch, however weak, wicked, and mischievous he may be. He who shares the divine nature, who is favoured with an emanation of Deity, is truly ennobled; for his very nature is exalted above the ordinary rank of humanity; and according to the gospel, he is become the living temple of the Holy Ghost. That a poor man, such as were the apostles, and such as are many true Christians in the present day, should possess a nature raised above whatever earthly honours can bestow, is a doctrine OFFENSIVE to all who have been taught to consider, as the chief good of man, the gratification of the pride of life.

* "Such doctrines (the doctrines peculiar to Christianity) must be received with scorn and derision, as an insolent claim to superiority of understanding, over those whom the WORLD pronounces wise and discerning."

IRELAND:
Scholars

Scholars * also, deep mathematicians, metaphysicians, and logicians, feel a sentiment of scorn, when they are told that a plain, simple, humble peasant, whose mind is rightly disposed, may receive a portion of divine illumination, which shall contribute more to sound wisdom, and consequently to happiness, than all their minute and laborious disquisitions. Philosophy, towering, like Icarus, on wings made by the art of man, to the clouds, looks down with contempt on Religion, who associates with ignorant persons, distinguished by humility of rank as much as by humility of disposition. Philosophy leaves the company of a personage so mean, and frequently passes from a contempt of her, to downright hatred and enmity †.

Thus

* I have mentioned an instance or two in my introductory chapter of the HAUTEUR with which SCHOLARS are apt to speak of the Carpenter's Son and the Fishermen. I will insert here another instance which just now occurs to me. The celebrated Dr. WHICHCOTE, one of the champions of reason and natural religion, though at the same time a great defender of the Christian faith, in times when it was the fashion and the road to preferment to decry all the high mysterious doctrines of Christianity, has the following passage in the fourth discourse of his third volume :

“ Our Saviour, that bore us high good will, and did, TO THE BEST OF HIS UNDERSTANDING, make the best of our cause, hath nothing to say against the right of God to make a law.” Here Dr. Whichcote (of superior understanding no doubt himself) talks of the best of our SAVIOUR'S UNDERSTANDING !

† The gentle or genteel philosopher too often hears with pain such sentiments of Christianity, as those of Erasmus in the following passage :

“ Existimo puram illam Christi PHILOSOPHIAM non aliunde facilius hauriri quam ex evangelicis libris, quam ex apostolicis literis ; in quibus, si quis PIE philosophetur, ORANS magis quam ARGUMENTANS, nihil esse, quod ad hominis felicitatem, nihil quod ad ullam hujus vitæ functionem pertinet, quod in his non sit traditum, discussum, et absolutum.”—I am of opinion that the genuine Philosophy of Christ cannot be derived from any source so successfully, as from the books of the Gospel and the Epistles of the Apostles, in which, if a man philosophises with a pious spirit, PRAYING rather than

K

Thus pride is a chief obstacle to the reception of the doctrine of evangelical grace. Pride blinds the eyes of the understanding against the evidence of the Holy Ghost. Pride causes hardness of heart, a quality the most odious to the divine, and most injurious to the human nature. It teaches us to behold our inferiors, not only as not of the same flesh and blood with ourselves*; not only as little entitled to the comforts and advantages of this life; but as unworthy of partaking with us in the divine favour, and the happiness of a glorified state. The doctrine of grace is considered by the men of the world, and the rulers of it, intoxicated with power, as too great a leveller, to be freely admitted consistently with their own ideas of exclusive privileges, or of worldly policy†. It must therefore be cried down, wherever their authority can prevail‡.

than ARGUING, he will find that there is nothing conducive to the happiness of man and the performance of any duty of human life, which is not, in some of these writings, laid down, discussed, and determined in a complete and satisfactory manner. ERASMUS.

* ——— “Non animos et corpora nostrâ

“Materiâ constare putat, paribusque Elementis,”

JUV.

What! cries her grace—are then the swinish herd

Made of such flesh and blood as we?—absurd!

Are souls like ours to vulgar wretches given?

I would not keep such company in Heaven.

This spirit of pride is apt to conceive the multitude, the canaille, that is, the poor, to whom the Gospel was preached, as only FOOD FOR POWDER.

† Yet they should remember, that death is a greater leveller, and one whom no policy or power can escape.

‡ How can ye BELIEVE, which receive honour one of another? John, v. 44.

Men lean on reeds, when they rely solely on each other for happiness and honour. Indeed, what real honour can one poor lost creature receive from another, who is exactly in the same lost condition with himself, if both be without GRACE?

Whatsoever ye do, do all to the GLORY of God. 1 Cor. 10.

But

But surely their objection does it honour. It shews that the doctrine is favourable to the whole human race; that it is not narrow, partial, unjust; but, like the Author of all good, whence it flows, accepts not the persons of men, neither regards the transient and petty distinctions of rank, but shews favour to the meek and lowly, and to all that are good and true of heart, whether in the palace or in the cottage.

Take comfort, ye poor and despised brethren; for God, by his gospel, has promised to bestow on you riches and honours, durable as they are solid, and such as no earthly power can confer or alienate: and would to Heaven that they, who trust in worldly riches and honours, could but behold in a true light, their real poverty and dishonourable state, when destitute of grace, or, in other words, destitute of the favour of the Almighty SOVEREIGN, the Lord of Lords, and the King of Kings *!

* “Nescit religio nostra personas accipere, nec conditiones hominum, sed animos inspicit singulorum. Servum ac nobilem de moribus pronunciat. Sola apud Deum libertas est non servire peccatis. Summa apud Deum est nobilitas clarum esse virtutibus.”—Our religion knows not to accept the persons of men; neither does it regard the external condition, but the internal disposition. It pronounces man a lord or a slave according to his morals. The only liberty in the sight of God is, not to be the servant of sin. The highest nobility before him is, to become illustrious for virtue. Hieronymus ad Celantiam, Ep. 14.

“Εὐγενεία δὲ, ἡ τῆς ἐκείνης τῆς ἀρετῆς, καὶ πρὸς τὸ ἀρχαῖον ἐξομαίωσις, ἢ ἡ ἐργάζεται λόγος καὶ ἀρετὴ.”—Nobility is the preservation of the image of God, a resemblance of the great model of all excellence, both which are effected by reason and virtue. GREG. NAZ. in Orat. II.

“Εὐγενείαν δὲ λέγω, οὐχ ἢ οἱ πολλοὶ νομίζουσιν ἀπαγεῖ· ἀλλ’ ἢ εὐσεβεία χαρακτηρίζει καὶ τρεπὸς, καὶ ἡ πρὸς τὸ πρῶτον ἀγαθὸν ἀνοδοί.”—When I speak of nobility, I mean not that which the vulgar herd deem such. Far from it. I mean that which piety and good morals characterize; and a return to the first good, to the original state, from which human nature has fallen. Idem. in Orat. 23.

SECTION XLIV.

The universal Prevalence of the Holy Spirit—the genuine Grace of the Gospel—highly conducive to the Happiness of CIVIL SOCIETY, as well as of Individuals.

IT always appeared to me an absurdity, that men should act in their corporate capacity on such principles as, in their individual and private state, they would deem profligate. Public acts are the acts of private men; and wherever public acts are immoral and unchristian, it may be concluded, that those who sanction them in a body, are, as separate members, insincere friends of virtue, and hypocritical professors of religion. Offensive war, and treacherous violation of the most solemn treaties, could never be countenanced by whole nations of Christians, if the individuals were actuated by the sentiments of true Christianity*.

It has been said, that we are not to look for the effects of Christianity in national acts or public councils. Why not? Are they not men and Christians, who perform national acts, and compose public councils? When a man gives a vote for any public measure, or advises the supreme magistrate, does he drop the Christian in the voter or the counsellor? Common sense revolts at the idea of the same men's renouncing their identity, splitting themselves into several characters, and acting in one inconsistently with their most serious

* “Magistrate, or minister, or lawyer, or merchant, or artificer, or whatsoever thou art, remember that thou art withal a Christian.”

Bp. SANDERSON.

duties

duties and solemn engagements in another, which, at the same time, they profess zealously to support. Misery unutterable arises to the human race, from this duplicity *. The sanctity assumed in one character throws a false glare and varnish over the villainy practised in the other, and makes it pass current by authority.

A man who is a real Christian, not a political conformist only, will be a Christian in his public conduct, as well as in his private. He will be a Christian statesman and member of parliament, no less than a Christian father, husband, and neighbour.

Now, no man is a Christian in name only, when his Christianity arises from the operation and evidence of the Holy Ghost. His very heart is converted. The whole man is renewed. He is no longer a proud, selfish, cruel being, greedily seeking his own fancied gratification at the expence of other men's happiness, but guided in all his conduct by the sentiment of love or benevolent affection, called, in Scripture, charity. The law of kindness governs all his actions. His wisdom is gentle; and he uses power, if he possesses it, in imitation of the all-powerful Being above, in diffusing blessings among all who are within the sphere of his influence.

Suppose, then, kings and rulers of all descriptions under the benign operation of the Christian spirit, and consequently firm believers and de-

* As for instance, if a man were to gain weight and influence among the good and generous part of mankind, by defending Christianity, and opposing the slave-trade, and then throw all his weight into the scale which already predominates for the most unchristian practices of unjust and unnecessary wars; would it be an admissible excuse to say, that in his book he is a true Christian; but in the House of Parliament, like many others, a worldly politician, promoting the purposes of SELF-AGGRANDIZEMENT, at the expence or hazard of human happiness?

fenders of Christianity. Unjust and unnecessary * wars immediately cease. The prophecies of Isaiah are accomplished. Swords and spears are converted into pruning hooks, and plough-shares. The lion dandles the lamb, without an inclination to devour it.

The people, feeling the blessings of such government, and actuated by the gentle affections of charity, become cordially attached to it, and to each other. Universal tranquillity reigns. The whole society, both the governed and governing, co-operate in adding to the comforts and diminishing the evils of life; piety to God, and love to man, display the vital efficacy of the gospel, and prove that it is not a cunningly devised fable, invented by priests for the support of kingly power; but the lively energy of God, actuating the human bosom, and restoring man to that perfection of nature by the second Adam, which was lost by the disobedience of the first in Paradise.

The truest patriotism, therefore, is to revive or diffuse genuine Christianity; to teach men to seek and to find the grace of God through Christ Jesus. This is the philosophy which should be taught from the chairs of our universities, and the pulpits of our churches. It would not then fall to the illiterate and fanciful mechanic, who often disgraces it, not only by ignorance of all other science, but too often by a violence of passion and malignity of temper, which seem to evince that he does not possess what he so warmly recommends to his audience.

* Homer has certain epithets, which the critics call perpetua epitheta; they have no particular meaning in the places where they are used, but accompany the substantives like shadows. The epithets just and necessary being applied to all wars, may be numbered among the perpetua epitheta of Homer.

Righteousness exalteth a nation. Proverbs 14.

Christianity

Christianity is so far from unfitting man for society, as the calumniators have said, that its graces and virtues are peculiarly social. It teaches every thing that is just and kind. It is the false, mistaken, hypocritical, and, above all, the POLITICAL Christianity, which has been the cause of mischief and misery. This has ever been used as a cloak for maliciousness. But where the Spirit of God, the living gospel of immediate grace, goes hand in hand with the written gospel, there every thing lovely, friendly, and beneficial, is the natural and unavoidable result. The root is good, and the fruit delicious and salubrious in the highest degree. May the tree spread its umbrageous branches over the land, and all the people take refuge and seek solace under its expanded foliage! The throne that is established in righteousness is fixed on the rock of ages; and the people who have the Lord for their God and King, shall never know the woes of captivity and desolation *.

Christian Philosophy purifies society by purifying the fountain of all human actions, the heart of man. Heathen philosophy often consisted of nothing more than fine sayings, pleasing to the imagination, but leaving the heart uninfluenced and the conduct unreformed.

* “ The political views of Constantine, in the establishment of Christianity, were to attach the subjects of the empire more firmly to himself and his successors, and the several nations which composed it, to one another, by the bonds of a religion common to all of them; to soften the ferocity of the armies; to reform the licentiousness of the provinces; and, by infusing a spirit of moderation and submission to government, to extinguish those principles of avarice and ambition, of injustice and violence, by which so many factions were formed, and the peace of the empire so often and so fatally broken. No religion was ever so well proportioned, nor so well directed, as that of Christianity seemed to be, to all these purposes.”

Lord BOLINGBROKE.

Some of those heathens, who wrote fine morality, it is well known, practised, and even obliquely recommended, with all the charms of wit and eloquence, vices which degrade man below the brute.

SECTION XLV.

Of Holiness—its true Meaning, and absolute Necessity.

LET a man's mind be holy, and he will not doubt one moment of the truth of Christianity. It is not enough that it be learned or sagacious; it must be holy; and then the more learned or the more sagacious, so much the more firmly will its belief be fixed, and so much the better enabled to extend the faith. Bacon, Boyle, Locke, Newton, Milton, Addison, Lord Chief Justice Hale, possessed intellects as vigorous as ever fell to the lot of human beings; but they were educated piously as well as learnedly, according to the manners of their times. They lived holily; the Spirit of Grace took early possession of their hearts, and they became not only believers but defenders of the faith. Not to their learning, but to their holiness, be the glory. They saw God by the eye of faith, not of philosophy*.

There is one qualification, without which we shall never be admitted to the favour of God, or

* Such men (when in the church, i. e. when ordained ministers) highly reverence the true use of every thing that is outward in religion; but, like the Psalmist's daughter, they are all glorious within. . . . they break open the whited sepulchre, they awaken the hearts, and shew all its filth and rottenness of death; but they leave it not, till the kingdom of heaven is raised up within it.

to

to felicity in the mansions of future glory, and it is HOLINESS: without this, we read, no man shall see the Lord. Follow PEACE with ALL men, and HOLINESS, without which, no man shall see the Lord.*

No words can be plainer and more express than these. A question naturally arises in the mind of every thinking man, in what consists this quality, which is indispensably necessary to securing the beatific privilege of enjoying the divine presence? What is holiness?

The excellent Joseph Mede informs us, that "sanctity, or holiness, imports discrimination,—or distinction from other things by way of exaltation and pre-eminence †."

God himself is originally, absolutely, and essentially HOLY; man, only by communication.

Holiness I therefore understand to be that state, in which God vouchsafes to man his HOLY SPIRIT, and discriminates him from those who, rejecting his offers of grace, presumptuously adhere to the world and its vanities; who neglect religion entirely, and who live without God in the world, despisers of his grace. To be holy, is to be refined, by the Spirit of God, from the corruptions of the world; to be separated from sin and impurity, like the metal from the base alloy.

He, therefore, who would see the Lord, must, by obedience, seek the manifestation of the Spirit,

* Heb. xii. 14.

† Thus Kimchi, on Isaiah lvi. 2.

"קדוש שבת להבדילו משאר הימים."

"To sanctify the sabbath, is to separate it from other days."

"כי כן כל לשון קדוש הוא ענין הברלו"

"מאחר במעלה."

"Because all words of sanctify import a thing separated from other things by way of pre-eminence or excellency."

Vide MEDE's Works, vol. i. p. 8.

by prayer obtain the divine assistance, and thus be admitted to a participation of the divine nature: according as his DIVINE POWER hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness, through the knowledge of him that hath called us to glory and virtue; whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises, that by these we might be PARTAKERS OF THE DIVINE NATURE, having escaped the CORRUPTION that is in the world through lust*.

The happy state of holiness constitutes the true dignity of human nature. This at once purifies and elevates it. The man who possesses it, enjoys this world with calm complacency, while he rises superior to it, and hopes for a better in reversion. He acts rightly, yet never rigidly; he always tempers justice with kindness and mercy; his whole behaviour is gentle, flowing from an internal principle of benevolence. The fear of God and the love of man operate on his heart as the main springs of all his activity. To express his conduct in scripture language, he does justice, loves mercy, and walks humbly with his God.

Behaviour thus amiable and beneficent is the surest proof of holiness. Great pretensions, sanctimonious deportment, a rigid observance of external ceremonies, and a pertinacious adherence to particular doctrines, are all consistent with an unholy state, with self-deceit, and with hypocrisy. But he who is kindly affectioned to his fellow-creatures with brotherly love; he who is unostentatiously pious, and displays the fruits of the Spirit by good works, he can entertain little doubt of SEEING GOD; seeing the truth of his word, and enjoying his presence in the living temple of his heart, thus consecrated by the influence of the Holy Ghost.

* 2 Pet. i. 4.

A delightful

A delightful serenity attends that state of holiness, which arises from an humble confidence in God; such as would render it devoutly to be wished for, if its consequences extended only to the pleasurable enjoyment of this life. It causes our journey to resemble a passage through those charming countries, where the air is genially soft, the sky clear, and the prospect variegated with every beauty of nature. The cold, shivering, self-dependent mortal, who walks through the world all solitary, who has not God for his friend and companion, may be compared to the forlorn savage, prowling for prey far from the solar beam, in the regions near the pole. How would he rejoice in the warm sunshine and sweet serenity of an Italian climate?

SECTION XLVI.

Of a good Heart.

THE most desirable treasure which a human being can possess, whether he has regard to his own happiness or to those around him, is a GOOD HEART. In every situation, and under all circumstances, this will furnish a store of sweets which the wicked cannot obtain, and delicious though it is, would not relish, so vitiated is their taste. A good heart communicates liberally the pleasures it enjoys; blessed or blessing under all circumstances and in every period of life*.

* Natural evil will, indeed, interrupt the felicity and impede the beneficence of the best men; and here we can only weep over human nature, and wait with patience for that state when tears shall be wiped from all eyes.

But what constitutes a good heart? The grace of God operating upon it. The mild, gentle, healing spirit of the gospel; or, to use the language of scripture, the UNCTION of the HOLY GHOST, mollifying its hardness, and preserving it from corruption *. This it is which forms a good heart, and a good heart is a land of Canaan to itself, a land flowing with milk and honey.

* Very pleasing is the description which Lactantius gives of the effect of Christianity in meliorating the disposition. I will transcribe his words:

“ Da mihi virum, qui sit iracundus, maledicus, effrœnatus: paucissimis Dei verbis tam placidum quam ovem reddam. Da cupidum, avarum, tenacem: jam tibi eum liberalem dabo et pecuniam suam plenis manibus largientem. Da crudelem & sanguinis appetentem; jam in veram clementiam furor ille mutabitur. Da injustum, insipientem, peccatorem: continuo et æquus, & prudens, & innocens erit. Uno enim Lavacro malitia omnis abolebitur. Tanta DIVINÆ SAPIENTIÆ vis est; ut in hominis pectus diffusa, matrem delictorum, stultitiam, uno semel impetu expellat; ad quod efficiendum, non mercede, non libris, non lucubrationibus opus est. Gratis ista sunt, facile, cito; modo pateant aures et PECTUS SAPIENTIAM SITIAT: num quis hæc philosophorum aut unquam præstitit aut præstare potuit?”

Give me a man who is choleric, abusive in his language, headstrong, and unruly; with a very few words, (the words of God,) I will render him as gentle as a lamb. Give me a greedy, miserly, close-fisted man; and I will presently return him to you a generous creature freely bestowing his money by handfuls. Give me a cruel, blood-thirsty wretch; instantly his ferocity shall be transformed to a truly mild and merciful disposition. Give me an unjust man, a foolish man, a sinful man; and on a sudden, he shall become honest, wise, and virtuous. In one LAVER (the laver of regeneration) all his wickedness shall be washed away. So great is the efficacy of the divine (or Christian) Philosophy; that when once admitted into the human heart, it expels FOLLY, the parent of all vice; and in accomplishing this great end, there is no occasion for any expence, no absolute need of books or deep and long study or meditation. The benefit is conferred gratuitously, easily, expeditiously; provided that the ears and the heart thirst after the wisdom (from above). Did any, or could any, of the heathen philosophers accomplish such important purposes as these?

LACT. Instit. Lib. ii. C. 26.

Thus appears the superiority of CHRISTIAN PHILOSOPHY, in a moral view, over all other philosophy. Lactantius had been a heathen philosopher, and spoke experimentally.

All the irascible passions are, in their excess, diabolical. They are the fruitful sources of misery. They would unparadise the garden of Eden, and turn the chearful light of Heaven into gloomy darkness, like the shadow in the valley of death. There is in the world much natural evil; there are pains, and diseases enough, to wean the heart from the immoderate love of it; but none of them are productive of wretchedness so great and difficult of cure as the malignant passions of pride, envy, and revenge. These estrange man from man, and convert the haunts of human creatures into dens of foxes and wolves. Cheats, calumniators, robbers, murderers, in all their variety and degrees of flagitiousness, are characters naturally flowing from hearts unsoftened, unenlightened, unhallowed by the Spirit of Grace.

But behold the Christian. Gentleness and sweetness beam from his eyes, and illumine his countenance with a mild lustre. Good humour predominates in all his demeanour. He has no concealed rage rankling in his bosom; he has no sinister and selfish views, under a studied openness of countenance. He converses with a generous frankness. His bosom is transparent. You are perfectly safe with him. He will serve you, if possible, as well as please you; but he will never injure you purposely, or give you the smallest pain. He feels complacency in all the good he sees around him, and delights in augmenting it. His treasure is within him. His interest is in Heaven. His ambition is for objects above the world; so that nothing in it is of value enough, in his estimation, to tempt him to resign the tranquillity of innocence, to renounce the pleasures of a friendly and benevolent disposition. He has all the ingenuous simplicity of the infantine age, and you

you delight in him, as in the harmless babe, who sports around you, and expresses his pains and pleasures according to the dictates of uncorrupted nature*.

Such is man, when his natural asperities are smoothed, and his inborn bitterness sweetened by the benign operation of celestial influence. Compared with the mere natural man, he is an angel. Is it not desirable thus to raise human nature, and thus to improve society; thus to render the earthly existence almost an anticipation of what our imperfect imaginations picture of the heavenly? Heathen philosophy cannot effect it. Heathen philosophy is confined to a few, in comparison with the myriads that compose the great mass of human beings; who weary themselves in pursuit of happiness on this terraqueous globe. The experiment has been tried by the philosophers of all ages, and failed. But religion can effect it. Yet what religion? A religion founded on historical faith, and heathen morality? No; it must be a vital religion—a divine influence on the heart, which is plainly promised and announced in the glad tidings of the gospel. This is the true evangelion, or GOOD NEWS†, to the human race. It is authen-

* GOODNESS is, in scripture, a characteristic quality of the third Person of the Trinity.—POWER, WISDOM, GOODNESS, these constitute a glorious Trinity; whether called a Platonic or a Christian Trinity. Can there be harm in adoring power in God the Father, wisdom in God the Son, goodness in God the Holy Ghost; power, wisdom, and goodness combined in the Tri-une Deity, equally the objects of love and reverence to man, whether acting conjointly or separately in his creation, his redemption, or his sanctification.

† What NEWS was it to mankind to tell them what Pythagoras, Socrates, Epictetus, Cicero, and many others, had told them before—the expediency of moral virtue, justice, temperance, fortitude, all which are often most conducive to worldly prosperity. The glad tidings were the announcing the comfort and assistance of the Holy Ghost, authenticated by the written gospel, and there is a witness within us which renders it unquestionable. Happy they who have obeyed the voice which commands, saying, "My son, give me thy " HEART * !" When the heart is devoted to Christ, the understanding will make no resistance to his doctrines, but humbly acknowledge the most inexplicable mysteries to be above, yet not contrary to, reason †.

SECTION XLVII.

On the superior Morality of the Christian Philosophy.

THE operation of divine grace being no other than the melioration of our hearts, the purifying of the very fountain of our actions, it must of necessity lead to the practice of virtue, or, in the language of scripture, to GOOD WORKS. It is a gross calumny to say that the true doctrine of Ghost, redemption, pardon, peace, and the resurrection. This was an evangelion or acceptable message brought from heaven by him who had the SPIRIT WITHOUT MEASURE (1). Except your righteousness exceed the righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in NO CASE enter into the kingdom of Heaven. Matth. v. 20. But the righteousness (or morality) of the heathens was that of the Scribes and Pharisees. It was the righteousness of the law, not of the gospel.

* Proverbs, xxiii. 26.

† "This man best understands the secret and undiscernable economy; he FEELS this unintelligible mystery, and sees with his " HEART what his tongue can never express, and his metaphysics can " never prove."

Bishop TAYLOR.

(1) John, iii. 34.

grace

grace * is unfavourable to morality. It inevitably produces every thing that is lovely and useful in social intercourse. The Holy Spirit's residence in the heart is inconsistent with vice and malevolence. It requires, indispensably, both personal purity and social love: and they who endeavour to obtain it, must begin and persevere in the practice of every moral virtue.

The love of God and of mankind are the two main springs which actuate every Christian, who is regenerated by grace.

The love of God was not enforced by heathen philosophy. The love of man was indeed frequently, though feebly, recommended; but at the same time, many dispositions of mind were held honourable, and worthy of cultivation, which are often inconsistent with the love of man. Such are valour in offensive war, revenge, love of glory, and of conquest.

The love of God must have the most favourable influence on moral conduct; for no obedience is so perfect as that which arises from affection. It is the alert, cordial, sincere obedience of a dutiful child to a tender parent. It anticipates his will, and is desirous, in its honest zeal to please, of going even beyond the line prescribed by parental authority.

And what is the love of God, but the love of goodness, purity, rectitude? Love not only admires, but endeavours to imitate, the object of its affection. The love of God, therefore, produces

* "There is, indeed," says Dr. Owen, "a great plea (or out-cry among the opponents of our doctrine) for MORAL VIRTUE. "I wish it were more out of love to virtue itself, than out of a design to cast contempt on the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, as it is delivered by the faithful dispensers of it."

a con-

a conduct as godlike as the condition of infirm humanity can admit. Hence St. John says, very strongly and truly, "This is the LOVE of GOD, "that we keep his commandments*." It is a natural and unavoidable consequence of loving the supreme perfection, that we imitate the qualities in which it consists—purity, justice, mercy, every thing that we can conceive of perfect goodness and beauty. Such is the first hinge of Christian morality.

And the second resembles it, in its benign effects on human nature, and the state of society.

It is the love of our fellow-creatures; not merely FRIENDSHIP, which is often founded only on petty interest and mutual amusement; but universal philanthropy, extending even to enemies. Every man under the operation of this liberal affection, is considered and cherished as a FRIEND and neighbour. We are taught by it to love others as ourselves, and to do to them as we wish they should do to us.

This extensive law of love is peculiar to our law-giver, the blessed Jesus. He calls it a new commandment. He makes it the distinguishing characteristic of the gospel. He proposes his own example, to enforce obedience to it. "This is my commandment," says he, "that ye love one another as I have loved you †."

But neither the love of God nor the love of man will exist in our hearts, in a due degree of ardour or sincerity, without the divine influence ‡.

* 1 John, v. 3. † John, xv. 12.

‡ "There is nothing that so sanctifies the heart, that keeps us in such habitual love, prayer, and delight in God; nothing that so kills all the roots of evil in our nature; that so renews and perfects all our virtues; that fills us with so much love, goodness, and good wishes to every creature, as this faith, that God is always present in us, with his light and Holy Spirit." LAW.

The

The natural man loves the world and himself too well to admit, whatever he may pretend or profess, affections so liberal, sublime, and disinterested. He loves MAMMON more than God; and as for the love of his fellow-creatures, he wears a false appearance of it, a studied politeness, courteousness, and affability, for the sake of availing himself of their assistance in gratifying avarice, ambition, and the love of pleasure; but he hates, envies, or utterly neglects, all who contribute neither to his fordid gain, nor to his personal gratification. Grace alone can soften and liberalize his contracted bosom. Grace alone can render him sincerely, secretly, and impartially virtuous; and the best Christian is the best member of civil society.

Let him who doubts the excellence of Christian morality, read our Saviour's sermon on the mount, with the discourses formed upon it by Blair*, Blackall, and other great divines of the English church. He will be struck with its pre-eminent beauty and utility. Indeed the whole body of English sermons founded on the gospel, exhibits a system of morality which the world never saw before, and which would never have existed without the evangelical code. I earnestly recommend to general perusal Bishop Gastrell's little book, intitled, Christian Institutes. Seneca, Epictetus, and all the pagan moralists, must hide their diminished heads on the comparison with the Christian Philosophy there exhibited.

* James Blair, M. A. President of William and Mary College in America. His sermons were first published by himself in 1722, and afterwards, in 1740, by the very learned Dr. Waterland. See particularly the paraphrase, in the first volume, on Matt. v. vi. vii.

SECTION XLVIII.

The true Genius and Spirit of Christianity productive of a certain Tenderness of Conscience, or Feeling of Rectitude, more favourable to right Conduct, than any Deductions of unassisted Reason, or heathen Morality.

A MAN, rightly disposed by the influence of genuine Christianity, becomes a law* unto himself, in all circumstances and situations. A DIVINE TEMPER, superinduced by divine energy on the heart, produces right conduct, just as a tree grafted with a kindly scion, brings forth fruit both delicious and salutary, under the natural operation of showers and sunshine.

A true Christian has constantly impressed upon his mind a sense of God's presence, and a conviction that he is responsible to his Father in heaven for all his conduct. This keeps him in awe, mixed with love. He fears to do wrong, not with a servile fear, but an affectionate reverence for his all-powerful friend, who has shewn him great favour, and at the same time required, in return for it, obedience to his injunctions, as a condition of its continuance. He loves God from his heart; an affection, which comprehends in it the love of every thing that is good in moral conduct, every

* "God," says Dr. John Jeffery, "might have delivered the doctrine of our religion, in a body of laws, like that of JUS-TINIAN." He probably would have done so, if he had intended the gospel to be a complete code of moral law; but he evidently intended that a LIVING TEACHER, even the SPIRIT, should accompany the historical gospel in all ages, and supply all our wants of instruction according to the occasion.

thing

thing pure and holy in his own person, every thing beneficent to society.

The residence of the Holy Ghost in the Christian's heart increases his moral sensibility. He sees with greater acuteness the good and beautiful * in behaviour; he feels with additional vivacity the emotions of benevolence. It gives him pain, it does violence to his very nature, thus sublimed, to act basely, unjustly, unkindly. He knows that the divine principle within him will not inhabit a polluted shrine; but will take offence† and depart, if the temple be profaned by immorality.

Casualty, or long and abstruse reasonings on the moral fitness or unfitness of actions, are totally unnecessary to the man whom the heavenly teacher has instructed. His determinations admit not such cold delay or doubtful hesitation. His heart turns, like the needle to the pole, with tremulous, yet certain propensity, to the point of rectitude. From the infirmity of human nature, and the violence of temptation, he may decline a little to the right or to the left; but the attraction to Heaven and virtue still acts upon and prevents his total aberration. Touched by Heaven, he acquires a kind of polarity, which causes him to point thither without any inclination to deviate.

Hence he is above the schools of the heathen moralists ‡. He displays that superiority which

* Καλοπαιθίαν.

† "Res delicata est Dei Spiritus."—The Spirit of God is delicate, i. e. easily disgusted with moral impurity. TERTULL.

‡ "As Christianity has all that is good in morality, so it far exceeds it, and accordingly our preaching should be above the rate of moral philosophy. Our divine orator should fetch not only his speculations and notions, but his materials for practice from the evangelical writings. This he must do, or else he is NO MINISTER OF THE NEW TESTAMENT. There is plenty of excellent moral discourses from the pulpit, urged with great art and vigour; but notwithstanding this, there never was less morality in men's lives and actions." Dr. EDWARDS's Preacher, vol. i. p. 82.

Jesus

Jesus Christ most justly claims over Socrates. Yet he may enjoy the beautiful compositions of the ancients, if his education has enabled him to understand them. He may be pleased and instructed with their fine observations on life and manners, and the great advances they made in ethics, by the light of nature. But though he may derive great benefit from them, though he may be both informed and advised by them, yet he sees them defective *, and finds that they are not absolutely necessary to accomplish the Christian, who, by the written word of scripture, accompanied by the Spirit's ministration, becomes sufficiently enlightened for the practice of the purest morality, and wise unto salvation. By Christian Philosophy, he experiences not only illumination, but assistance : he is taught the way that he should go, and led by the hand in his journey.

I conclude, then, from this tender sensibility to right and wrong, and this propensity to kindness, which the supernatural agency of the Spirit causes in the heart, that true Christianity, such as is founded on the vital influence of the Spirit, makes the best moralists, the most useful and worthiest members of society. And as Christian Philosophy is attainable by ALL, and not confined to the rich or the learned, it appears to me, that even politicians, who consider only the prosperity and peace of nations, would evince the highest wisdom, in first cultivating it themselves, and then encouraging it, by all prudent modes, among the people. What a feeble system is that of the French Theophilanthropists divested, as they pretend it is, of evangelical authority !

* Life and immortality are brought to light by the gospel. There is also in the gospel, the perfect example of Jesus Christ ; and example teaches better than precept. They who preach merely in the manner of Cicero and Antoninus are the apostles of DEISM.

When

When a whole community shall become, by the preaching* of evangelical doctrines, and the example of the great, subject to the power of conscience, warmed with the love of God, and all mankind, "just and good, true and sincere, meek, humble, tender-hearted, and compassionate, content, temperate, pure, and heavenly-minded, then will men become each a law to himself," and all civil government will be greatly facilitated, while the general happiness is secured without wars and fightings, without tumult and discord, without capital punishments, without any of that severe coercion, which creates partial evil for the sake of the general security.

Such a state, it will be said, is chimerical and Utopian. I fear, in the present corruptions of Christianity, it may be visionary. But every approach to it is desirable, as it is an approach to the happiness and perfection to which man is formed to aspire; and therefore, it will behove all those who possess power, not for sordid purposes, but the general good, to hasten and extend the reign of grace. They should say with heart as well as voice, looking unto Jesus, THY KINGDOM COME.

* "How seldom," says Dr. John Edwards, "are the people informed about the true nature of regeneration, or the new birth? How seldom is the absolute necessity of the knowledge of Christ as a mediator, insisted upon? It is rare to hear the preacher speak of and maintain the absolute necessity of being supernaturally enlightened, in order to the right and saving understanding of the things of God? Nay, how often do we hear the CONTRARY? *. I have known that when some of those doctrines have been discoursed of by one in the pulpit, it hath been said that he preached like a Presbyterian. But if this be to preach like a Presbyterian, I pray heartily that the number of Presbyterians may increase more and more; and if this be to preach like a Presbyterian, then all our BISHOPS and our UNIVERSITIES, and all our DIVINES were Presbyterians, in Queen Elizabeth and King James the First's days, and afterwards; for no man can have the face to deny that these were the doctrines that they openly professed and maintained."

EDWARDS'S Preacher, vol. 1. p. 44.

SECTION XLXIX.

The great Advantage of Christian Philosophy being taught by a commanding Authority.

WHEN mere men teach, they submit their lessons to the judgment of their hearers, who usually assume the office of critics, while they appear in the character of disciples. They will learn only what pleases their taste, or is approved by their judgment. But Jesus Christ, being filled with the Spirit of God, taught with commanding authority. "I and the Father are one," says he. "I speak not of myself, but of him that sent me." "WHOSO KEEPETH MY SAYINGS, SHALL NOT TASTE OF DEATH."

What heathen philosopher ever dared to come forward, as a teacher of mankind, with such weighty words as these? But it will be found, that however a few among mankind may be disposed to listen to calm reasonings, the great mass is most effectually taught what is fair and what is base, what is useful and what pernicious*, by the voice of well-founded authority.

The scriptures, especially those of the New Testament, have long obtained this authority. We read them, not as we read any other book, of the wisest of mortals; not as judges, empowered to condemn or approve; but as pupils or dependents listen to the commands of an acknowledged master, whom they, at the same time, love and fear;

* — " Quid sit pulchrum, quid turpe, quid utile, quid non." —
HOR.

and

and whose commands, they are sensible, are for their good, however disagreeable the duty required. We consult the Gospel as an oracle. But we do not so consult the dialogues of Plato, or the Manual of Epictetus.

"There are," says the author of the Light of Nature pursued, "many excellent sentiments of God and morality interspersed in the writings of the antients: but those writings are studied by few, and read chiefly for curiosity and amusement, regarded as ingenious compositions, shewing a sagacity and justness of thought in the authors. They make some impression in the reading, which quickly dies away again, upon laying the book aside; as Tully tells us was his case; with respect to Plato upon the immortality of the soul. Whereas the Testament is the first book we are taught to read, to receive as the oracle of God, containing the way to salvation, which, at our almost PERIL, we must not disregard, and the truth whereof it is a sin to doubt: therefore, whatever is drawn thence, comes accompanied with a reverence, and idea of high importance, which give a force to the impression. Let a man take for his thesis the stoical maxim, Things out of our power are nothing to us, and descant upon the imprudence of solitude and anxiety for future events, which we can no ways prevent or provide against, it will not work the effects which the very same discourse might do, pronounced from the PULPIT, upon the text, Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof."

Where is the uninspired philosopher, who can address mankind with the authority of St. Paul? "My speech and my preaching," says he to the Corinthians, "is not with enticing words of man's “ man’s wisdom, but with demonstration of the “ SPIRIT AND POWER, that your faith might not be “ in the WISDOM OF MEN, but in the power of God “ (accompanying and enforcing my words). We “ speak the wisdom of God in a mystery, even “ the bidden wisdom, which none of the princes of “ this world knew, but which God hath revealed “ unto us by his Spirit, the τα Βαθη του Θεου, the “ depths of God. We have received, not the spi- “ rit of the world, but the Spirit which is of God ;

 “ that we might KNOW the things that are freely “ given to us of God ; which things also we “ speak, not in the words which man’s wisdom
 “ teacheth, but which the Holy Spirit teacheth, “ explaining the * things of the Spirit, (the in- “ structions of the Spirit,) in the language of the “ Spirit †.” Again, to the Ephesians he says,
 “ The mystery of Christ, which in other ages was “ not made known to the sons of men, is now re“ vealed unto his holy apostles and prophets, by “ the Spirit ‡.” “ For this cause,” (he adds in another place,) “ thank we God without ceasing, “ because, when ye received the WORD OF GOD,
 “ which ye heard of us, ye received it not as the “ word of men, but, as it is in truth, the WORD “ OF GOD §.” He gives also a menacing admo-nition to those who should despise his directions, as despising not man, but God. “ HE THAT “ DESPISETH, DESPISETH NOT MAN, BUT GOD, “ WHO HATH GIVEN UNTO US HIS HOLY SPI-“ RIT ||.”

* See Wolf. Cur. Critic. in Loc. and Chapman’s Eusebius.

† 1 Cor. ii. 4, 5, 7, 8. 10. 12, 13.

‡ Ephes. iii. 5. § 1 Theff. ii. 13.

|| 1 Theff. iv. 8.

L

Such

Such is the commanding authority with which Christianity addresses itself to men, including, in its peculiar doctrines and sublime mysteries, the finest ETHICS, though not systematically delivered, which the world ever saw. Let it be considered what an advantage it is to have even the best heathen morality inculcated with the sanction of COMMANDMENTS from the all-wise and all-powerful Creator. Such is now the case where Christianity prevails. And would it be wise, even in a political sense, though policy is a very inferior consideration, to suffer a mode of teaching men to be just and good, thus efficacious, thus firmly and extensively established, to fall into neglect? When will the politicians of the world again obtain so powerful an engine? What have they to substitute, if they break or take away the main spring of this most efficacious, long-tried machine? I beg leave to apologize for using so degrading a term. I am speaking, in their own language, to the worldly-wise, who despise the gospel.

Some universal, authoritative code of moral law is wanted to instruct the MILLION, high and low, rich and poor, with great and certain effect. What teacher, from the schools of philosophy, ancient or modern, if he deprive us of Christianity, can supply the defect? Will he not strive to supply it, but suffer mankind to lapse into ignorance, barbarism, and brutality? He may give us a laboured system. But nothing which the most ingenious and learned can invent, however excellent its rules and precepts, can gain the advantage which Christianity already possesses by its AUTHORITY alone. Time, and the concurrence of whole nations, have combined with its own excellence to render it impressive beyond any human system. It is adapted to the poor and unlearned *, of which the majority of mankind, in all ages and countries, consist. It speaks to them as a voice from Heaven, and it will be heard.
to

But its AUTHORITY must be infinitely increased, when men shall be convinced that the written gospel is accompanied at the present hour, and will be to the end of time, with the MINISTRATION OF THE SPIRIT, the actual operation of the Holy Ghost, vivifying and illuminating the divine principle within us. Christian philosophy is a sun; while all other, to use the poet's language, is, comparatively, but "darkness visible."

Christ taught as one having AUTHORITY. Christ spake as never MAN spake; and they who hear him with faith, will, through the operation of the HOLY GHOST, possess a wisdom and a happiness which MAN never knew how to bestow, and can never take away.

* But under the management of some persons, as Erasmus observes, EST INGENIOSA RES ESSE CHRISTIANUM; it requires a great deal of INGENUITY to be a Christian; as the TREE OF KNOWLEDGE was once preferred to the TREE OF LIFE, so learning is preferred to piety; and as Grotius expresses it—ex RELIGIONE ARS FACTA EST.—RELIGION IS MADE AN ART by many, as it has by some, a trade.

SECTION L.

Morality, or Obedience to the Commandments of God in social Intercourse and Personal Conduct, remarkably insisted upon in the Gospel.

THAT most injurious calumny, which asserts that the doctrine of grace is unfavourable to the purest virtue * and the most beneficent behaviour in civil society, must be refuted in the mind of every reasonable and impartial man, who attends to the following passages of Scripture :

“ He that hath my commandments, and keepeth
 “ them, HE IT IS THAT LOVETH ME. If ye love “ me, keep my commandments. If a man love “ me, he will keep my words. He that loveth
 “ me not, keepeth not my sayings. Every branch
 “ in me that beareth not fruit, he taketh away ;
 “ and every branch that beareth fruit, he purgeth
 “ it. Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I “ command you. If ye continue in my word,
 “ then are ye my disciples indeed. Hereby do “ we know that we know him, if we keep his “ commandments. Whoso keepeth his word, in “ him verily is the love of God perfected : hereby

* “ They (the rationalists and moral philosophers) charge their “ opposers for not pressing moral duties : if they mean thereby practical “ Christianity, there are none in the world press it more. But we “ are not for a Pagan, but a Christian morality : and think it not ad-“ viseable to press external acts alone, without minding the principle “ and root from whence all that is truly Christian must spring. We “ count it absurd and preposterous to look for fruits where there is “ no root : for gracious acts where grace is not planted in the heart.
 “ They may deck a maypole with as many garlands as they please,
 “ and set off a mast with flags and streamers ; but they will never “ thereby make them FRUIT TREES.”

CLARKSON on Saving Grace.

“ know

“ know we that we are in him. Every man that “ has his hope in him, purifieth himself. Little “ children, let no man deceive you : he that doeth “ righteousness is righteous ; he that committeth “ sin is of the devil. Whosoever is born of God, “ sinneth not ; whosoever doth not righteousness, “ is not of God. Pure religion and undefiled be“ fore God and the Father, is this—to visit the “ fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to “ keep himself unspotted from the world. Be not “ deceived ; neither fornicators, nor idolaters, “ nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, nor “ revilers, nor extortioners, shall inherit the king“ dom of God *.”

It were easy to cite a great many more passages of the same moral importance ; but the written Gospel is in the hands of all, and there no one can search, with a fair and candid mind, without finding the purest virtue enforced on the strongest motives that can possibly actuate a human creature.

The truth is, that the very same care and caution, the same virtuous exertions, are necessary to Christians, as if there were no supernatural and auxiliary interposition. Our endeavours must not be relaxed in the smallest degree. The difference and advantage lies in the result and effect of our endeavours. Under the divine influence, they will certainly be attended with success. They will promote our happiness infallibly. The CHOICE of our conduct must be voluntary, and our perseverance and labour must be directed by the purest motives, and the most steady, regular, and careful diligence, just as if we depended upon ourselves ; while, at the same time, they are animated and supported by humble confidence in heavenly favour. No remissness is allowed on our part, in consequence of God's favour. We are to work out our salvation with the utmost solicitude, knowing that he who gives us his grace, may, upon failure of our best endeavours, withdraw it, and leave us in a state of woeful desertion. Libertinism can avail itself of no such doctrines as these, which, in the very first instance, most emphatically recommend purity of heart, the fountain of all external action.

* John, xiv. 15. 1 John, ii. 3. 5, &c. Jam. i. 27. 1 Cor. vi. 9, 10. Eph. v. 5, 6.

It is remarkable of the gospel, that it teaches obedience to human law, and every moral virtue, not only for wrath, but also for conscience sake *.

* Archbishop Tillotson says, in his zeal, I suppose, to oppose the Antinomians: "MORALITY is the NEW CREATURE spoken of in the New Testament. Morality is all in all in the Christian religion. The Christian religion is the law of nature revived and perfected. The fruits of the Spirit are the same with the moral virtues. Grace and virtue are but two names that signify the same thing." See various passages in TILLOTSON'S Sermons.

The archbishop here very injudiciously depreciates Christianity in his endeavour to identify it with heathen philosophy and natural religion. But I cite his opinions in this place on the moral excellence of the Christian religion, merely as a testimony against those, who insinuate that the true evangelical doctrines are unfavourable to morality. The great Tillotson, we see, affirms that morality is all in all in the Christian religion.

SECTION LI.

Unbelievers not to be addressed merely with subtle Reasoning, which they always oppose in its own way, not to be ridiculed, not to be treated with severity, but to be tenderly and affectionately exhorted to prepare their Hearts for the reception of the INWARD WITNESS, and to relume the LIGHT OF LIFE, which they have extinguished, or rendered faint, through Pride, Vice, or total Neglect.

FACTS have evinced, that theological disputation has little effect in converting the infidel. Infidels have often been remarkable for native sagacity, and richly furnished with human learning, though little acquainted with divine knowledge. I never knew any of them retract their errors, after the publication of the most ingenious and laborious books which claimed the honour of completely refuting them. It is time to try another method, since none can be more unsuccessful than that which has hitherto been used. It is time to trust less in human means, and rely on the power * of God, which will manifest itself in the hearts of all men who persevere with earnestness in seeking divine illumination.

I deem it extremely imprudent and indecent to ridicule the unbeliever. It is setting him an example, which he may follow to the great injury of all that is serious and truly valuable both in morals and religion. It argues a levity and disre-

* "POWER among the Jews signified more than a quality: it signified a PERSON."

G. RIDLEY.

The Holy Ghost is the Spirit of God and the POWER of the Most High.

gard for his happiness, very unbecoming any man who knows the value of a human soul, or who professes a solicitude to save it alive. Though it cause no conversion, it will produce retaliation.

Still more unchristian is it to treat him with severity *. I have read books professing to recommend the benign religion of Christ, and to refute all objections to it, yet written in the very GALL OF BITTERNESS, and displaying a pride and malignity of heart which may justly prompt the unbeliever to say, "If your religion, of which you profess to be a believer, and which you describe as teaching charity or benevolence in its fullest extent, can produce no better a specimen than your own temper and disposition, let me preserve my GOOD-NATURE, and you may keep your Christianity, with all its boasted advantages, in your own exclusive possession."

The late Bishop Warburton treated infidels with a haughty asperity scarcely proper to be shewn to thieves and murderers, or any the most abandoned members of society. Many have doubted, from the tenour of his writings, whether he was a believer; or whether he only thought it sufficient, for the sake of rising in the church, to support religion by argument as a state engine. Certain it is, that the spirit which he shews towards his opponents † is not the Spirit of Grace; that Spirit which

* "Any thing that is proud, any thing that is peevish and scornful, any thing that is uncharitable, is against the υγιαινουσα διδασκαλία, that sound doctrine of which the apostles speak. Pro-fessio Christiana nil nisi justum suadet et lenē.—The Christian profession teaches nothing but justice and meekness, kindness and charity."

Bp. TAYLOR.

† The following is a specimen of the TEMPER with which Bishop Warburton wrote his book on the doctrine of Grace. In the fifth chapter, where he is speaking of the office and operations of the Holy Spirit, which is loving, gentle, and easy to be entreated. His polemic spirit is singularly proud and acrimonious; and so has been the spirit of many of his controversial predecessors and successors.

How amiable and gentle, on comparison, the language and sentiments of Voltaire * and Rousseau! Compare them with the mean, narrow, selfish sentiments of a time-serving preferment hunter, or the political caution and hypocrisy of a sacerdotal COURTIER. Voltaire and Rousseau would have loved Christianity, and probably believed it, if it had not been distorted and disfigured by the malignant passions of angry defenders of it, who shewed their love of Christ, by hating their brother, and who appeared by their actions to mean little by their professions, besides the gratification of pride and avarice.

Religion is beautiful. Full of grace are her lips. She shall speak for herself to the hearts of unbelievers, and the busy, thoughtless world:

Spirit, he has the following note on Mr. WILLIAM LAW, who, if mistaken, is allowed to have been a sincere Christian, and a very good as well as ingenious man:

“ This poor man,” (says the great Prelate,) “ whether misled by his fanaticism or his spleen, has here fallen into a trap which his folly laid for his MALICE.”

There is then no malice in this observation, no pride, no revenge.

* “ In the writings of Voltaire, who never fails to have a taunting hit at the clergy, the CURE’ is generally an amiable personage, a charitable man, a friend to the poor and unfortunate, a peace-maker, and a man of piety and worth.”

ROBISON’S Proofs of Conspiracy.

Voltaire saw in the CURE’ (or parish priest) real Christianity—in the court clergy of France, hypocrisy, villainy, pride, and CRUELTY.

Would not the true spirit of Christianity reprobate such men, hiding the foul fiend under the white robes of religion? I bear my testimony, in the strongest terms, against the general tendency of Rousseau’s and Voltaire’s writings; but think much of their evil is to be attributed to the COURT CLERGY of France.

" Come unto me, all ye that labour and are " heavy laden, and I will refresh you. I call you,
 " not for the sake of promoting any worldly inte" rest, not for political purposes, not for an ec" clesiastical party, not to maintain the riches or
 " grandeur of any corrupt establishment; but that " I may make you happy; that I may dispel the " clouds of trouble and doubt which darken your
 " paths, and shew you the sunshine of Heaven.
 " Mine is a spirit of love. I am a lover of men.
 " I seek to do you good. I bring the glad tidings
 " of the Gospel; that is, I disclose to you that " God Almighty, in pity to suffering and erring
 " mortals, sends a COMFORTER, the Holy Ghost,
 " descending like a dove, all peaceable, gentle,
 " lovely. I fill you with hope; and hope is
 " a cheerful passion. I tranquillize your agi" tated bosoms, and lead you, rejoicing on your " way, to the silent grave, whither you must go,
 " whether you make your journey to it cheerful
 " and pleasant, as you may, under my guidance,
 " or dismally dark, as it will ever be, when I with" draw my lustre."

Would not such a mode of address be more likely to conciliate men who reject Christianity, than all the angry, taunting language which has been used, not only against professed infidels, but against believers, who disagreed a little in matters of indifference *. South, Bentley, Warburton, and some able writers in recent times, have shewn, in their zealous defences, the pride of pedantry, the fierceness of barbarians, the subtlety of Machiavelian politicians, but quite forgot the gentleness

* " Holy wars have ever been the worst of wars; and scriptural " debates the most intemperate: what is gained in argument is per" haps lost in piety—in charity undoubtedly." GILPIN.

which

which characterizes the WISDOM FROM HEAVEN, and which alone can win souls by the charms of soft persuasion, assisted by the holy spirit of love.

It is said of Dr. Johnson, that he used to declare, he loved a good HATER. Many polemical divines have shewn themselves capable of this passion of HATRED in its highest perfection. But hatred begets hatred; and Dr. Johnson's declaration is among those inconsistencies in his life, which prove a great man still but a man. I am sorry that this saying should be recorded of him; for Dr. Johnson professed himself a zealous Christian, and Christ taught us to love even an enemy. According to the Christian rule, an enemy, instead of being hated, is to be melted to love and kindness by good usage.

The odium theologicum, or the rancour of the clergy to each other, when they discuss controversial points of divinity, is, in my opinion, the greatest opprobrium theologicum. A blot in the theological character not to be wiped off by the officious hand of the most partial apologist *. Warburtonian insolence and ill-nature have done more injury to the church, and to the cause of Christianity, than any of the writers whom they were intended to gall and mortify.

* See Warburton's dedication to freethinkers, and many parts of his works: specimens of great levity, bitter invective, gross sarcasm, and total carelessness for the state, both present and final, of those unhappy persons, whom he justly represents as miserably mistaken. Does the good shepherd worry the stray sheep with bloodhounds, or bruise them with his crook? The crozier, or pastoral staff, of Warburton became in his hands a bludgeon or a rod of iron.

SECTION LII.

Of the inadequate Idea entertained by many respectable Persons concerning Christianity; with a Suggestion on the Expediency of their considering the true Nature of Christian Philosophy.

TO abstain from gross, enormous, open, and scandalous vices, to comply with the outward ceremonies of the Church, and to reciprocate the usual and formal civilities of life, constitutes, in the opinion of multitudes, not only a very respectable member of society, but a very good Christian. Concerning the DOCTRINES of Christianity, such persons give themselves little concern, but plume themselves on decently practising the DUTIES; by which they understand nothing more than a very imperfect kind of heathen morality, and the avoidance of such conduct as might expose them to the animadversion of law, or to the loss of reputation. The DUTIES of Christianity thus limited, they think easily discernible, without study or reading, by common observation and common sense. Doing as others do, as far as the decorum of established manners allows and prescribes, is the grand rule. Such persons pass through life with great credit, paying their way, (as it is expressed,) and making themselves agreeable in company, and are seldom mentioned but with the praise of very good sort of people.

Exactly such sort of people they might have been if Christianity had never existed. They hold no opinion, they adopt no practice peculiar to Christianity. The Gospel, which they profess to embrace, embrace, is a leaden rule, an accommodating guide, an humble companion, that must obsequiously stand on one side, whenever it is in the way of a fashionable practice. Gaming, duelling, and many modes of gratification inconsistent both with the letter and spirit of the Gospel, seem to receive no check from this convenient species of Christianity.

Any thoughts which may occasionally intrude of a very serious kind, are laughed away by the surrounding circle, as vapours, fancies, the effects of morbid melancholy, or of nervous indisposition. Company, public places, public diversions, are immediately proposed as a sovereign remedy; and indeed they certainly are so far a remedy, that they banish serious thoughts, but they also banish that happy disposition, (for happiness is serious,) which might have caused the visitation from on high, and obtained, for the weary and sick heart, the sweetly-refreshing cordial of divine grace.

Attendance at polite places of public worship * seems to constitute the piety of such persons; and public subscription to fashionable or political contributions shews their charity. It seems fair to infer, that their piety and charity are thus circumscribed, because their actions, on other occasions and at other places, seem inconsistent with piety

* Where hell is not mentioned to ears polite, where the ear is "pleased and the heart untouched, which," says Bishop Stillingfleet, "seems to be like stroking the consciences of people with feathers dipt in oil."—"In certain finical sermons of some great pulpit haranguers," says Dr. Edwards, "the name of God is esteemed low and mean. I could quote some of them who avoid that word, as if it were not fine enough for them, but must be exchanged, in all their discourses, for the divine Being, the Almighty, the Author of all Things, the Governor of the World; and so they seldom use the word Christ, but substitute some other title. Some pronounce the word God, Gad, and Lord, Lud," &c.

Dr. JOHN EDWARDS.

OR

or charity. Sunday is often employed by them in a manner forbidden both by divine and human laws; and the poor at the next door to their mansions, in some retired village, are often unrelieved, while strangers at a watering place, (where the benefactors names are handed about,) and advertised objects, receive a very ample share of their public bounty.

All this while they consider themselves as good Christians. God only knows the heart; but if they are mistaken, as is probable, their mistake is a very unhappy one. They are depriving themselves of the benefit of Christianity.

But their mistake probably arises from ignorance. They are indeed very far from ignorant of many things. Their ignorance is chiefly ignorance of religion; and it is caused by habitual inattention to the DOCTRINES of Christianity*. It is indeed rather difficult to avoid such ignorance, since their time is occupied in what religion calls vanity, and the few hours devoted to reading are chiefly employed in novels, where a truly Christian character would be deemed a perfect solecism.

I humbly hope that the contemplation of CHRISTIAN PHILOSOPHY, thus imperfectly represented in this little volume, may lead them to study it in the great authors whom I have cited; and I trust they will thence find a great increase in their comforts, and that their happiness will be less exposed to concussion, when founded on the solid basis of divine favour.

* “ And they said unto him, we have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost; and he (St. Paul) said unto them, unto what then were ye baptized?” Acts, xix. 2, 3.

SECTION LIII.

On Indifference and Insensibility to Religion, arising from Hardness of Heart. No Progress can be made in CHRISTIAN PHILOSOPHY in such a State, as it is a State incompatible with the divine Influence.—The Doctrine of an actual CHANGE, supernaturally produced, in the Heart, vindicated from the Charge of Enthusiasm.

THE fine feelings with which nature formed the heart of man in his primeval state, and with which perhaps every infant is born, are too often rendered obtuse by indiscriminate commerce with the world; and the heart of flesh, once tremblingly alive to the softest touch of sympathy, is metamorphosed to a heart of stone*. Deplorable change! for what is man when he ceases to feel? a reasoning vegetable, with this painful pre-eminence over the nettles and briars, that he has the power of being actively mischievous in the present state, and capable, when the sensibility shall be restored in another, of final and insufferable woe. To lapse into this condition, to become past feeling, to have a seared conscience, is, without doubt, the heaviest calamity of which human nature is susceptible. Perhaps he who is reduced to it is not conscious of it at the time; a circumstance which, contrary to what might be expected,

* Σκληροκαρδία.—There is a judicial hardness of heart thus described in the Scriptures:

“ For the heart of this people is waxed gross, and their ears are “ dull of hearing, and their eyes have they closed; lest they should “ see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and UNDERSTAND
 “ WITH THEIR HEART, and should be converted, and I should heal “ them.” Acts, chap. xxx. 27. Isaiah, vi. 9.

ultimately

ultimately aggravates his misfortune. It is characteristic of this state, that while it is alive to the vanities and miseries of the world, it is dead to God and all the delicate sensations of unaffected virtue.

This condition of religious insensibility is not to be accounted for by causes merely physical or philosophical. The middle-aged fall into it as well as the old, the healthy as well as the diseased, men of the brightest talents no less than the dull and the stupid. But Christian Philosophy traces its origin, and pronounces it the consequence of an UNREGENERATE state, or the total defect of divine grace. He who lives in it has forsaken his God, the guide of his youth; and his God has forsaken him, and given him up to a reprobate mind, a heart of STONE, at once cold and impenetrable. WHOM HE WILL, HE HARDENETH *.

Happily he, who in his displeasure inflicted the misfortune, can remove it. "A new heart," says God, "will I give you, a new Spirit will I put into you; and I will take away the STONY †

* Romans, ix. 18.

† Our most learned and pious poet Milton alludes to this passage. He was a firm believer in the doctrine of the Spirit's influence on the heart of man, as is evident from several passages, both of his prose and poetry. I quote the following fine lines from his Paradise Lost:

"Thus they in lowliest plight repentant stood
 "Praying; for from the Mercy Seat above
 "PREVENIENT GRACE descending had removed
 "The STONY from their hearts, and made NEW FLESH
 "REGENERATE grow instead, that sighs now breathed
 "Unutterable, which the SPIRIT OF PRAYER
 "Inspired and winged for Heaven." Book xi. l. 1.

Let us hear him in prose:

"It is a human frailty to err, and no man is infallible here on earth. But so long as all those profess to set the Word of God only before them for the rule of faith and obedience, and use all diligence and sincerity of heart by reading, by learning, by study, by prayer for the ILLUMINATION OF THE HOLY SPIRIT TO UNDERSTAND the rule and obey it, they have done what man can do: God will assuredly pardon them."

"heart

“ heart out of your flesh ; and I will give you a “ heart of flesh , and I will put my Spirit within “ you, and cause you to walk in my statutes, and “ ye shall keep my judgments, and do them *.”

From this declaration mankind may conclude, (as many ever have been and still are experimentally convinced,) that God influences the human bosom by his actual interposition and the supernatural energy of his Holy Spirit. Christ himself says, “ Lo! I am with you, even unto the end of the world.” But how is he with us but by the Holy Ghost, whose ordinary operations are now as energetic as ever on the bosom of the true believer. Except a man be born again of this Spirit, we read in express language, “ he cannot see the kingdom of God.” No words can be more explicit. They mean regeneration by Grace, or what else do they mean? They support, as on a rock, the doctrine of divine agency ; and without this doctrine, all teaching and preaching is “ as salt that has lost its flavour.” This doctrine forms the solid basis of CHRISTIAN PHILOSOPHY. All morality, every precept and principle which leads to happiness present or future, stand upon it immoveably. Other buildings are of hay and stubble ; this is of gold and marble.

And with respect to the charge of blameable enthusiasm †, which is constantly brought, and cannot

* Ezekiel, xxxvi. 26, 27.

† It wou'd be blameable enthusiasm to pretend to the GRATIÆ GRATIS DATÆ, as the schoolmen express it ; that is, to the χαρίσματα, such as the gift of tongues, miracles, signs, wonders, and prophecy ; but is not blameable enthusiasm to believe that, what the same schoolmen call GRATIÆ GRATUM FACIENTES ; that is, the χαριτες, such as joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, FAITH, meekness, temperance, are given or inspired by that Spirit which, in the language of the liturgy, God sent to teach the hearts of his faithful people? If this is blameable enthusiasm, then the Liturgy and cannot be too frequently repelled, let us hear Bishop Lavington, so great an enemy to methodism, that he wrote the severest book which ever appeared in opposition to it. But thus he speaks to his clergy, on a solemn occasion, when he was instructing them how to execute their pastoral office :

“ My brethren,” says he, “ I beg you will rise up with me against MORAL PREACHING. We have long been attempting the reformation of the nation by discourses of this kind. With what success? NONE AT ALL. On the contrary, we have dexterously preached the people into downright infidelity. We must change our voice. We must preach Christ, and him crucified. Nothing but the GOSPEL is, nothing will be found to be, the power of God unto salvation, besides. Let me therefore again and again request, may I not add, let me CHARGE you, to preach JESUS, and salvation through his name. Preach the Lord who bought us; preach redemption through his blood; preach the saying of the great High Priest; HE WHO BELIEVETH SHALL BE SAVED; preach repentance towards God, and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ.”

Thus Bishop Lavington; a man who abhorred fanaticism. Who could ever suspect Archbishop Secker*, Bishop Hurd, Bishop Horne, Bishop Horsley, and the New Testament abound in blameable enthusiasm, and Bishop Warburton and many other bishops should, as honest men, have resigned their mitres, risen from their woollacks, and gone to their farms or merchandize for GAIN; and not have made a gain of (pretended) godliness.

* “ The truth, I fear, is,” says Archbishop Secker, “ that many, if not most of us, have DWELT TOO LITTLE ON THESE DOCTRINES,” (the doctrine of Grace and other peculiar doctrines of Christianity,) “ in our SERMONS—by no means, in general, from disbelieving or slighting them.”

Again,

Horsley, of irrational enthusiasm? Yet, in their discourses and charges, they all urge their clergy, not to preach mere moral doctrines, the philosophy of the heathens, but the Gospel; that is, the great doctrines of redemption, atonement, satisfaction by Christ, and the necessity and importance of divine grace. If, by the coming of Christ, God recommended only a MORAL SYSTEM, merely REPUBLISHED the religion of nature, this would in fact have been no Revelation. Indeed, a merely moral Christianity is Deism.

When Christianity is the national religion, and great revenues are allotted to its professional teachers, many may chuse to join the crowd of Christians for the loaves and fishes; many may call themselves Christians who have nothing of Christianity but the name, and in their hearts despise even the name; but let all serious and sensible men remember, that if the Gospel is hid, it is hid to them that are lost, whose eyes the God of this world hath blinded; let them in time beware, lest that come upon them which is spoken by the prophet: "Behold, ye despisers, and wonder and perish;

Again, says the same discerning Primate: "We have, in fact, LOST MANY OF OUR PEOPLE TO SECTARIES, BY NOT PREACHING IN A MANNER SUFFICIENTLY EVANGELICAL."

SECKER'S CHARGES.

There never was a more discreet, rational, or judicious Archbishop than Secker. He could not favour fanaticism, for he was a man who guided his thoughts and actions by the strictest rules of right reason. He was a wise man, even according to this world's notion of wisdom; and his natural constitution, as to devotional feelings, was too cold to produce enthusiasm.

The faint praise, or rather the detraction from the character of Archbishop Secker, in the Life of Warburton, published by Bishop Hurd, is ably and properly exposed in a pamphlet by Dr. Wintle. Gratitude is amiable, and much must be pardoned even to its excesses; yet it must be blamed, when it proceeds to a violation of truth and justice, to vile sycophantism and servile adulation.

" for

“ for I work a work in your days, a work which “ you will in no wise understand, though a man “ declare it unto you *.”

SECTION LIV.

A Self-Examination recommended respecting religious Insensibility.

I ADVISE my reader, without a moment's delay, to take a view of the present state of his heart. Let us lay aside books awhile, and consider our own bosoms, without self-flattery, and uninterrupted either by business or pleasure.

Does my heart require renovation? Is it piously inclined to God, and kindly to my fellow-creature? Am I convinced of my own ignorance, weakness, and unworthiness? Have I enquired into the health of my soul, the state of my temper and disposition, with half the solicitude with which I take care to feed, to cure, to adorn my body? If not, I may call myself a Christian, and join the congregation of Christians, but I am probably still a heathen, still unregenerate. I may be in the gall of bitterness, and the bond of iniquity. My heart may be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin, and as I value my happiness in this short state of existence, or my immortal soul, I must seek the divine Grace, to give me a lively sense of my wants and wretchedness, and of God's power and will to illuminate and comfort me by his Holy Spirit.

* Acts, xiii. 40, 41.

But,

But, supposing that I am feelingly convinced of sin and misery, and sincerely wish to be delivered from it, do I seek deliverance by the Gospel means, that is, through Jesus Christ; or do I depend upon my own reason, a few moral acts and habits observed for the sake of decency, for my own health, wealth, and that reputation in the world which is necessary to the advancement of my interest? If so, my morality is worldly wisdom, and my religion has no claim to Christianity. I am unregenerate, unconverted, unrenewed, notwithstanding my baptism and my professions; and continuing as I do by choice a heathen, in the midst of the light of Christianity, which at the same time I solemnly profess * to admire and adopt, I must finally perish, after an unsatisfactory life.

Is my Christianity a cold, philosophical assent to a few propositions in the Gospel, evident before the Gospel was divulged, and such as I select from others of the same authority in the same book, which I do not so well approve? Then is my religion nominal only. I profess to believe, as others appear to do, what I never in my life fully considered. I am content to live without God in the world, so long as my corn and my wine increase, and I can say to my soul, "Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years, take thine ease, eat, drink, and be merry †." For the sake of living at peace, and for the sake of credit, which is intimately connected with my interest, I conform to all outward ceremonies and all moral decencies; but my heart has not yet been truly turned

* "Every other confession of the reasonableness and excellency of the Christian religion, but that which the correction of sin and misery in the soul makes of it, is but like the praise of a bystander, who commends something in which he has no concern." LAW.

† Luke, xii. 20.

to

to God. I know no other God than my own gain and pleasure ; and as to heaven, this earth, so long as I secure to myself a large share of it and its good things, is my paradise. I say to myself, " It is good for me to be here ; here will I build my tabernacle ; for it is a pleasant place, and I have a delight therein." But what shall I say when this world is receding from me, when my senses decay, and death evidently approaches ? Then shall I have no comfort, unless God should soften my heart by the effusion of his Spirit. But lest my obduracy should grow impenetrable by time, I will immediately implore the divine favour, in co-operation with my own endeavours, to restore my religious sensibility. I will henceforth cultivate the love of God. I will acquaint myself with him, and be at peace.

But to love God only, is not enough. Do I love my FELLOW-CREATURE ? or, as it is expressed in Scripture, " my neighbour ?" The Apostle says, " Beloved, let us love one another, for love is of God, and every one that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God ; he that loveth not, knoweth not God, and therefore cannot be born of him, for God is love *." How, then, is my heart affected towards my fellow-creatures ? Are my friendships merely combinations for the sake of interest and pleasure ? Is there any human being in the world whom I wish to be miserable, and would render so, if I had him in my power ? Have I no sympathetic feelings for MEN AS MEN ? If I cannot recollect acts of DISINTERESTED beneficence, I may rest assured that the same hardness of heart which renders me insensible to God, has also made me a stranger to the social affections. I have need,

* 1 John, iv. 7, 8.

therefore,

therefore, to pray that God would thaw my heart by the sunshine of his grace. He who can turn a *heart of stone into a heart of flesh, will cause me to feel, by his Spirit's influence, for those who share with me the evils incident to humanity.

By such questions as the above, and many such every man may propose to himself, the state of the heart may be ascertained much better than by signing articles or repeating a symbol.

God certainly made the heart of man tender. Jesus himself wept, and thus for ever hallowed the briny fountain. Tears are appropriated to man, as one of the most honourable distinctions which separate him from the brute creation. When man has dried up the sacred source by acquired insensibility, he has degraded his nature, and must have recourse to God to make him a new creature, to regenerate and render him alive to the sentiments of divine love, and the soft touches of humane sympathy. God's Spirit can break the rock of flint asunder, and cause the waters to gush from it in abundance.

And can I venture to hope that he will do so, that he will melt my obduracy? Yes, certainly; for Jesus Christ has PROMISED the influence of his Spirit to renew the heart, and accomplish the great work of regeneration. Without this I cannot be happy. I may be rich, learned, powerful, but I cannot be happy. I am lost and undone without it; in a state more degraded and wretched than that of the lowest and obscurest human being, whose piety and humility may have drawn down upon his heart the holy emanation of divine love.

* Ezekiel, xxxvi. 26.

SECTION LV.

The Sum and Substance of Christian Philosophy the Renewal of the Heart by Divine Grace; or the softening it and rendering it susceptible of virtuous and benevolent impressions, by cultivating the two grand Principles—Piety to God, and Charity to Man.

WHAT is Christian wisdom or philosophy? Let the apostle answer; it is to “put off the old man, which is corrupt, and to put on the new man, which, after God, is created in righteousness and true holiness.” We must be born again, or it had been better for us that we had not been born at all. The wisdom from above is the true Christian Philosophy; that wisdom which, we are told*, “is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality, and without hypocrisy.”

Hardness of heart, we have seen, is incompatible with this wisdom which is full of mercy. The bosom must be softened by divine influence. Redeem the time, therefore, that you have hitherto lost in a cold, lifeless, formal, metaphysical, and decorous religion. Love God, love your neighbour, with the ardour of a sincere mind, and the amiable simplicity of infantine innocence. Seek Jesus Christ with the earnestness of one who is a Christian by choice, and not merely because he was born in a Christian country, or of Christian parents; not because the laws of the land have established that religion,

* James, iii. 17.

religion, and it is creditable to appear among its professors in places consecrated to public devotion. Be Christians on your pillows, in your daily employments, in the occupation of your merchandize or agriculture, as well as in your church, and on the day set apart for divine service. Let Christ *, by the Holy Ghost, be formed in your hearts, restoring in you the image of God, in which you were created, but which was sadly sullied, or quite defaced, by the fall of the first Adam, and can be restored only by the mercy of the second.

If there were but a probability that these comfortable doctrines are true, a wise man would cherish them; but as they are abundantly confirmed by the written word, by the church, by the learned, by the experience and testimony of millions of pious men; who would not resolve to believe, and if any doubts should at any time arise, to say, "Lord, help thou my unbelief?"

Religion has been, and is, the delight of a great part of our fellow-creatures throughout Christendom. It may be ours, if we will but duly apply our minds to it. Consider with what ardour of attachment many seek pictures, books, the works of art, the objects of taste and fancy. They learn to love them, by applying their minds to them. Half the application bestowed on things, which, at best, are but toys, would, if bestowed on religion, make it your chief delight, the guardian of your youth, and the comfort of your age and affliction. You would no longer consider its duties and employments as heavy and dull. You would feel, not only the offices of charity, but devotion, sweet to your

* God is in Christ; in Christ dwelt all the fullness of the Godhead bodily; God is in Christ; Christ is IMMANUEL, God with us. Col. ii. 9. 2 Cor. v. 19. Isaiah, vii. 14. Matt. i. 23.

soul. The gracious words of Gospel truth, of prayer, and thanksgiving, would "come o'er "thine ear," as the poet says,

" ——— like the sweet south
"That breathes upon a bank of violets."

It is justly said, that in devotional offices, passion becomes reason, and transport, temper. Heaven must disdain the cold prayer, the lukewarm praise of insensibility and indifference. The incense must blaze on the altar, before the sweet odours can ascend to the skies. Cold devotion is indevout. Heartless thanksgiving is an insult. What! shall we be warm, and anxious, and sanguine, in worldly pursuits, in politics and party, and dull and languid as followers of Christ, in shewing our zeal in the cause of the great Captain of our salvation, which is the cause of all mankind, a cause in which Heaven and earth are interested?

Be it the great endeavour of all who would obtain wisdom from above, to conciliate, by fervent prayer, the grace of God, which will remove all hardness of heart, the cause of that coldness and insensibility, which is too often most unjustly honoured with the name of MODERATION *.

* "Because thou art LUKE-WARM, I will vomit thee out of my "mouth"—spasmi—one of the strongest expressions of contempt and indignation in the holy scriptures. REV. iii. 16.

SECTION LVI.

On spiritual Slumber, as described in the Scriptures, and the Necessity of being awakened.

THE religious world is divided into many sects ; but perhaps the most numerous party consists of NOMINAL Christians, who, tacitly professing Christianity, appear to adopt no religious opinions at all ; who, indeed, neither deny the truth of any religion, nor controvert its doctrines ; but who give themselves up to the pleasures and business of the world, or to mere thoughtlessness and inactivity, and leave religion to its ordained ministers, to their neighbours, to the weak, the sick, and the superannuated. In the words of Isaiah, “ They hear, but understand not ; and see, indeed, but perceive not ; the heart of this people is fat, their ears heavy, and their eyes shut.” With respect to their spiritual state, they may be said to have fallen into a deep sleep ; and in the midst of their bodily activity, their souls, as far as religion is concerned, are sunk in slumber. To these the animating words of the apostle are addressed : “ Awake, thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light.”

Is it possible (it might be asked) that men can sleep so soundly, in this uncertain state, while the house they inhabit may be said to be in flames, or while they lie on the very brink of a steep cliff, from which, if they fall, they fall to rise no more ? It is not only possible, but common ; though it is a sleep, in which, whosoever indulges, may possibly sleep on till he wake no more. It may be a fatal sleep ; the sleep of death ; the stupor of a lethargy; the numbness of a spiritual palsy; the insensibility of mortification.

They who fall into this deep sleep, like those who indulge the sleep of nature, commonly lie in DARKNESS; the darkness of voluntary ignorance. During their repose, indolence smooths their pillow, and silences their pavilion. Their eyes are closed by prejudice, and the curtains drawn around them by pride and presumption. The opiates of vanity, of worldly ease and pleasure, superinduce a kind of trance. Sealed are their eye-lids, but their sleep is not a quiet sleep; it is not sweet and refreshing, like the sleep of virtue, the balmy repose of health, wearied, at the close of day, with the exertions of beneficence.

Theirs is a sleep interrupted by dreams. Shadowy, fantastic forms, of a thousand shapes and hues, flit before their fancy. Ambition has her dreams, Avarice her spectres, and Pleasure her visions of ideal bliss, painted with a glow of colouring, which the pencil cannot emulate.

Crowns and sceptres, purple robes, crimson banners, with titles of honour, and armorial bearings, pass, like a pageant, before the courtier, the statesman, the senator, the lawyer, and the warrior. Each fixes his eye upon them devoutly. He catches at them eagerly, as the glittering train moves on. They elude his grasp. He catches again. The air-drawn baubles vanish. Again he is disappointed. Still he perseveres; and with aching heart, and trembling knees, and palsied hand, he reaches, at last, perhaps, with great difficulty, a coronet, a star, a riband, and places it on his shaking head, or his throbbing bosom;—then, stumbling on the dark mountains, down he falls, stripped of all his blushing honours and his gorgeous robes. Clad in a shroud, and with a few few vain words engraved on his coffin-plate, his body is thrust, lest he should become noisome, into a mouldy vault, to rot and be forgotten HERE, where alone he sought distinction; and to appear divested of all its gaudy ornaments before Christ, his judge; of whom he never once thought seriously, during the deep sleep and the long day-dreams of a vain, worldly, irreligious life.

Behold another dreamer, with a hoary head, lying down to rest, not on soft pillows, but on bags of gold*. It is the miser; he dreams that the pale spectre of haggard poverty is pursuing hard after him; a cold sweat bedews his emaciated cheeks, and his teeth shake; but he is cheered again by dreaming of bargains, usurious contracts, of joining house to house, and laying field to field; of saving all he gains, of taking advantage of the wants of one, and the ignorance of another, to fill his enormous chest. And lo! it is now full. Is he happy? and does he use it? Does he enjoy it for the purposes it was designed? Does he think of God, the giver of all good things? Does he distribute it to the poor? No; his joy consists in telling it over and over, weighing it with shaking hands, and viewing it with a dim spectacled eye, which can scarcely distinguish a counterfeit from a true coin. At some future period, when he shall have completed a certain sum, he dreams that he shall build, plant, do good, and be whatever a man ought to be. But the sleep of death comes on before the dream of life is over, and he is gone. And now his heir thrusts him into the ground, with a face of affected grief, that can hardly hide

* " ——— Congestis undique saccis
" Indormis ———"

HOR:

his real joy. Down sinks the dreaming dotard, into the bosom of that earth * to which his mind was prone ; his very name rots with his emaciated body ; and his spirit, now poor indeed, moans and bewails that he laid up no treasure in Heaven ; and that, in his earthly visions, he never thought of his soul ; never felt a desire for the riches of grace.

And now behold his heir. Possessed of wealth which he never knew the toil of earning, he becomes a man of pleasure ; and he also dreameth a dream. The banquet is prepared. The wine giveth its colour in the cup. The gaming-table is before him. Noise and riot drive away thought and care. The singing men and the singing women enter. Money is lavished on horses, dogs, sharpers, buffoons ; and no debts regarded but those of false honour. His heart dances to the melody of the harp and the viol ; he pampers every bodily sense, till pleasure itself is converted into pain or insensibility. He dreams on, and soon sees phantoms of pleasure, the ghosts of departed joys, dancing, in mockery, before his eyes. His powers of perception decay, his youth and health are departed, and he droops like a hyacinth, broken down by a hasty shower, before it has expanded its beauty. Down he sinks to the earth, into an untimely grave ; and mourns, as he retires from the shadowy scene, that a greediness of pleasure surfeited his senses, and robbed him, not only of longer life, but of real enjoyment during its continuance. What preparation did he make to relish the pleasures which flow at God's right hand ; the pleasures of reason, the sweets of benevolence,

* "O pronæ in terras animæ, et Cælestium inanes !" PERS. all-

all-pure, all-spiritual, no less exquisite in the enjoyment, than exalted and durable in their nature? Alas! none. He had neither time nor inclination. His soul slept, while his body waked with a fever. The fine sensibilities of the spiritual nature were enveloped in slumber, while his bodily senses were unnaturally jaded, and prematurely worn out by constant vigilance and activity. He drank the cup of pleasure to the dregs, and the dregs were to his palate wormwood, and to his vitals poison.

Similar to such slumbers and such dreams are the slumbers and the dreams of many who are met walking in their sleep in the streets of the city; who are seen all lively and active in the gaily-illuminated theatres of pleasure, in the crowded emporiums of commerce *, in the courts of princes, in the senate-house, in the forum, and at the tribunal. Deeply do they drink the draughts of worldly vanity, which, like doses of opium, lay them indeed asleep; but at the same time fill them with self-conceit and pride, and disturb them with dreams, wild as the scenes of fairy land. Theirs is not a sweet sleep; it is the sleep of disease, and resembles what the physicians call the COMA VIGIL, a waking slumber, a dangerous symptom. Then let no man indulge the first tendencies to the sleep of the soul; but rather shake off sloth, and hear the voice which calls him like the cheerful herald of the morning: "Awake, thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light." Cheerful, pleasant, merciful warning! But many, it is feared, are too fast asleep to hear it. Like the swallows in the winter,

* "Virorum iugæ, negotia vocantur."—The toys of full-grown men are called business.
AUGUSTIN. Confess. i. 9.

they lie in a torpid state ; but even the swallows, when the spring calls them forth, rise from their temporary death, (if such it may be called,) to soar with joy and triumph in the gay fields of æther. The primroses and violets sleep on their banks for many months ; but when the bland voice of the zephyrs whisper “ arise,” they spring forth, lift up their heads, and drink the sun-beams, and the dew of Heaven. And shall the cold ear of man be for ever deaf to the still small voice of conscience ; and shall his eyes be impenetrable to the beams of grace ? Many seem to have little in their nature of a religious disposition ; yet let us not conclude that any of the sons of Adam, any of the redeemed of Christ, are destitute of that LIVING PRINCIPLE, which is to be fostered and cherished even to immortal life. There is in every man a spark, perhaps a latent spark, which only requires to be gently blown by the aspiration of the Holy Ghost, to become a clear light, and afford a vital warmth, to guide to all evangelical truth, and to invigorate the mind with faith and hope. There is in every man a seed of virtue, goodness, and piety, which only requires the divine grace to shine upon it, in order to become a flourishing plant, exuberant in its foliage, beautiful in its blossom, abundant in its delicious fruit, striking root deeply in the heart, reaching the Heavens with its branches, and vegetating in beautiful verdure to all eternity.

To excite this spark, to cherish this little tender seed of grace, this, O sons of men, is the work, this the labour *. Arise, therefore, and be doing, and the Lord be with you.

* “ Hic labor, hoc opus.”

Let

Let all men take an impartial view of their own state, and examine whether they are not in the state of spiritual sleeping and dreaming already described. How passes our life? We eat, we drink, we sleep. To-morrow and to-morrow the same dull repetition: we eat, we drink, we sleep. So also do the poor animals around us, whom we look down upon as our inferiors. How are we employed in the intervals of this animal, or rather vegetative life? We buy, we sell, we dress, we trifle, we visit, we tell or hear the tale of the day, often a trifling, often a false, sometimes a malevolent one; but in all this, have little other design than to pass away the time without reflection; to forget ourselves; to hide the prospect before us—death, judgment, heaven, and hell!

How stands the real state of that religion which we profess? We learned our catechism in our infancy; we read the bible at school; we go to church like others; we hear and repeat our prayers; but have we, indeed, considered our religion as our principal concern? Christianity is either true or not true. If we believe it true, it must be our chief concern; if not true, then why mock we both God and man by our hypocrisy? But we profess to believe it true. Have we then the symptoms of sincere belief? Have we any secret exercises of the soul in converse and communion with God? Do we spend any time with our own hearts? Have we no sweet intercourse with Heaven in solitude? no fervour of piety, no inward religion, no spiritual sensibility, no pious ardour, no secret store of comfort unknown to the world, and which the world cannot reach, locked up, as a precious jewel, in the casket of the heart? If we have not, we have reason to suspect that our belief is insincere, we are assuredly in that state which requires us to listen to the animating call, "Awake, thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead;" for dead we are to God; dead to every thing but that vanity which ever terminates in vexation; dead to all those remains of excellence, which have preserved, amidst the ruins of human nature, some faint vestige of its original grandeur and grace.

Take away the spiritual life, and you level man with the brutes. He becomes immediately what the philosophers of old called him, an animal with two legs, and without feathers*. How are the mighty fallen! The wings of the eagle are clipped. He no longer eyes the golden sun, but grovels, like a reptile, on the earth. You not only level him with the brutes. You make him more miserable than they; for he is sorely sensible of his evils, which they are not; he is sensible of his forlorn condition, sensible of the shortness and possible evils of life, suffers imaginary as well as real woe, and sees the gloomy prospect before him—the grave opening to swallow him up, and the possibility of something terrible beyond it. If we are but animals, then are we of all animals most miserable! Our very perfections are our bane.

Since a religious LETHARGY is thus degrading to our nature, let us rescue ourselves from it to-day, while it is called to-day; and let no man say with the sluggard, "a little more sleep, and a little more slumber, a little more folding of the hands to sleep." Life ebbs apace. The day is far spent to many of us. The night is at hand, when the sad licence may be allowed to us in that severe permission, "Sleep on, now, and take your rest." Your sun is set to rise no more. Death's scythed,

* "Bipes et implume."

triumphal

triumphal car, drives on rapidly, and mows down all that stand in the way. It is computed, by the ingenious in calculation, that, on the surface of the globe, more than fifty thousand men, women, and children, die every night. How soon may any one of us make an unit in the thousands that every hour go down into the pit, and are no more seen!

One of the best means of shaking off slumber and raising the soul from the sleep of death, is a due preparation for the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. Let us never fail to receive it at Christmas, Whitsuntide, and Easter, if we should be so negligent as to omit it at other times*. We shall thus experience a resurrection from the sleep and death of indifference, to life and hope in Christ our Redeemer.

It is, indeed, an alarming symptom of a spiritual slumber, that many go on from year to year, without once receiving the sacrament; without seeking that mysterious communion between God and the human soul; without feeling any need of it; without desiring it; without any hunger or thirst after it. If men were not wrapt in a deep sleep, or state of stupidity, they would long for it; feel an appetite for the heavenly manna; and come to the Lord's table, as to their daily meals, with thirst and hunger.

What shall we think of those numerous professed Christians who, from month to month, during many years, hear notice given of the sacrament to be administered, and pay it not the least attention? who think it a matter which may concern any body but themselves? How many among the poor

* I am cautious of recommending a weekly, or even monthly, reception of the sacrament to the multitude of all ages, knowing the tendency of familiarity to divert the mind of due reverence, and that awe which is salutary. The well-disposed, it is hoped, will require no exhortation to frequent communion.

never think of approaching the altar; live and die, without having once received the sacrament, or sought any other means of grace? Do they think the rich only are capable of grace; that the rich only have souls to save; that our Lord, like the world, invites the rich only to his table? Think, did I say? Alas they think little on the subject. They are in a deep sleep; lost in the night of ignorance. And it unfortunately happens, that if they are awakened at all, it is usually by the call of some enthusiast, improperly called a *methodist, who leads them from the chillness of indifference, to the burning fever of fanatical devotion. Let them rather hear the EVANGELICAL call, and apply it to themselves without delay; "Awake, thou that sleepest;" and let them obey the friendly voice of him who came expressly to preach the gospel to the poor. Let them prepare themselves immediately to use the means of grace afforded them by the sacrament of the Lord's supper, and be thankful that at that table there are no invidious distinctions; that the rich and poor meet together, prostrate on their knees before their Maker, partaking his bounty without partiality, and supplicating his mercy; all equally poor and helpless, without the support and riches of his GRACE.

There are, it seems probable, many others, who think themselves too young to be at all concerned with things so serious as the sacrament. They go, indeed, to church, but never think of the holy communion, because they are too young to be serious. Permit me to ask, what is the precise age at which the care of the soul is to commence? When does the minority of the soul terminate? If all are exempt who are young, and who think themselves

* Methodism is described as "GODLINESS without ORDER," i. e. without method.

themselves young, how great will be the number ! Is not going to church a serious thing ? They do not think themselves too young to go to church. May it not then be suspected, that as they think themselves unconcerned with the sacrament, they may also think themselves unconcerned with the prayers and the discourses of the church ; and so may frequent the church, merely to display their external garb, to gaze and to be gazed at, to pass away an idle hour, and to comply from worldly motives, with an established custom ? But if there be truth in Christianity, they are trifling with the most important matters, in a most dangerous manner. They are acquiring a HABIT of considering the most sacred things with INDIFFERENCE. If they are too young to think of serious things, they certainly are not too young to die. Let them take a walk in the church-yard, and read the inscriptions on the tomb-stones. They will find, perhaps, as many young as old, among the victims of death ; and they must allow that youth is a more dangerous season, with respect to temptations, if not diseases, than any other ; and consequently, that it more particularly requires the succours of divine grace, to keep it from falling into sin and misery. And what so powerful a means of grace as the sacrament, after a due preparation ?

None indeed are too young to receive the divine blessings of grace. Every human being at every age should be sensible how much he wants it ; how wretched and how profligate he may become ; into what shameful and dreadful conduct he may fall, without it. Awake, therefore, we may properly say to the youngest among us, awake from a sleep, which you cannot indulge without losing the morning of life ; the best season for every kind of work, spiritual as well as worldly. Begin well, in order to end well. Remember your Creator in the days of your youth, and he will not forget you in the days of your old age. Trust not in beauty. Trust not in strength. Beauty alone has no charms in the eye of Heaven. Strength of body cannot avail against the arm of offended Omnipotence. But beauty and strength, combined with virtue and piety—how lovely in the sight of men *! how pleasing to Heaven—peculiarly pleasing, because, with every temptation to deviate, they voluntarily walk in the path of duty.
in

There is another class yet, with whom I shall expostulate on the propriety of receiving the sacrament, (as a means of exciting them from sleep,) which they are but too apt to neglect, apparently from an idea that they have no concern in it. They claim to be lookers-on, like spectators at a contest for life and death, without any interest in the event. I mean the numerous persons who fill the very useful and creditable station of servants and dependants, apprentices, and labourers for hire. These are apt to consider Sunday merely as a holiday, or rather vacation from labour; a day, in which they are to adorn themselves above their rank and station, and to sacrifice to the idols of false pleasure and expensive vanity. To think of the sacrament, or any other serious, affecting duty, on a day devoted to feasting, to jollity, and to wandering from house to house, would throw a gloom upon it, inconsistent with their schemes of enjoyment. Thoughtlessness and folly too often mark their conduct on that day, more than on any day in the week; a day intended for their improvement in all virtue, honesty, and true wisdom.

* “Gratior et pulchre veniens in corpore virtus.” VIRG.

Let

Let them ask themselves whether they have not souls, as well as their superiors in rank? Is not our God their God? Did not Christ die for them, as well as for their masters or employers? Let them think of these things, nor suffer the sabbath-day, intended to promote their salvation, contribute, more than any other day, to their destruction. Would they have it a day of pleasure? So would we, their superiors in civil rank; but in order to be such, it must be a day of innocence, a day of devotion, a day of rational, sober, and discreet recreation.

Let not the sprightliest age imagine that religion will destroy its cheerfulness. No; it will promote it. Nothing gives so fine spirits as a clear conscience; a bosom that feels the satisfaction of having discharged its duties to God and man. Then recreation and harmless pleasure are truly delightful. The sweet, in such circumstances, is without bitter; the rose without a thorn; the honey without a sting. I have ever recommended a cheerful religion; because all religion was certainly intended to make men happy; and because gloominess, moroseness, and severity, which some persons require, without discrimination, in all religious offices, originate in weakness and error, and lead to folly, misery, and madness; to all that is despicable or deplorable. As religion is the comfort; so superstition, fanaticism, and consequent dejection of mind, are the bane and curse of human nature. Let us ever beware of EXCESS, even in good and laudable pursuits; for wisdom, and virtue, and happiness, all dwell with the golden mediocrity. Our professional, or paternal exhortations to religion must indeed be warm and animated; because the greater part of men err, rather in not reaching the desirable point, than by going beyond beyond it. Yet cautions are also necessary, lest the willing, the zealous, the tender-hearted, should be urged, by their own ardour and by persuasion, to dangerous and unhappy extremes, to melancholy and despair.
beyond

It appears, I think, from what has been already said, that the lively and animating summons contained in the words, "AWAKE, THOU THAT SLEEPEST," is necessary to a great part of mankind, whose feelings are become callous; and who (to repeat the emphatic words of scripture) have a HEART of STONE, instead of a HEART of FLESH; necessary to many, who are, upon the whole, commendable for the general decency and propriety of their conduct in the world, as the world is now circumstanced. Even good kind of people, as they are called, and appear to men, are often not sufficiently awakened to the calls of religious duty. They acquiesce in decencies, decourments, plausibilities, and the cold formal morality which may be practised on the most selfish motives, for worldly interest, for health, and for pleasure. They are not sufficiently sensible of the gospel truths, its great promises, and its dreadful denunciations of vengeance. They are virtuous heathens; followers of the religion of nature, not that of Christ. The world approves them, and therefore they approve themselves; but can the world save them? Can they save themselves? No; assuredly, if Christianity be not a fable, they must come to Christ, and to Christ only, for salvation.

Persons who live in pleasure, that is, who make vain and sensual pleasure the SOLE business of their lives, are expressly said, in scripture, to be DEAD while they live. They appear with smiles of perpetual gaiety; are often furnished with riches and honours; but yet, in the scripture sense, they are dead, dead, if they are not alive to Christ. What avail worldly possessions and ornaments to a spirit dead in trespasses and sins? The SOUL, in its best state, takes no real delight in them, because it naturally aspires to higher things. So have I seen a nosegay of tulips, and pinks, and roses, put into the cold hand of a corpse, in a coffin, though the poor image of what once was man, could neither see the gaudy tints, nor smell the fragrance.

Shall we then not cry aloud, as we are commanded, in the hope of awakening such unthinking persons to a sense of their own miserable condition, and the hopes afforded by the gospel? Happy for ourselves and our fellow-creatures, if we could address a slumbering world with the trump of an archangel, uttering these enlivening words, "Awake, thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead; and Christ shall give thee light."

All persons whatever, however decent and moral that are in an unregenerated state, are represented, in the strong metaphorical language of scripture, as DEAD; but happily it is a death from which we may raise ourselves by PRAYER; and returning life will be cherished by heavenly influence.

For what says the friendly call? "Christ shall give thee light." The sun of righteousness shall shine into the dark chambers of thy bosom, dispel the shades of ignorance, and disperse the phantoms of folly and vanity that sported in the sunless region. Think, poor darkling mortal, what is promised thee! "Christ shall give thee light." As the sun in the morning breaks into thy chamber windows, and thou arisest from thy bed to feel his genial beams, and see all nature re-assuming her beautiful colours; so the light of Christ, the light of grace, shall beam upon the soul, by the operation

tion of the Holy Ghost, and thou shalt arise, and see the truth as it is in Jesus—see the beauty of holiness—the day-spring from on high—feel new vital warmth glowing in thy bosom; and “*though you have lien among the pots ,” (in the mire and rubbish of worldly vanity,) “yet shall you be as a dove, which hath silver wings, and her feathers like gold.”

After living the few days of our pilgrimage thus awake to God, awake to Christ, awake to the blessed influences of the Holy Ghost, your body, indeed, shall lie down, and pay that debt to nature which we must all pay; yet your soul shall separate from it (though not without a pang, yet) FULL OF HOPE. Old age, or disease, or accidents, will indeed bring your poor, frail, perishing flesh (for such is that of the strongest, the youngest, the most beautiful of us all) to the grave; your bones must lie down in the dust, from which they were taken, and the mourners shall go about the streets; but let them not mourn without hope. Thy flesh shall rest in hope; peaceful shalt thou sleep till the morning of the resurrection; when the trumpet shall sound, and a voice shall be heard, sweeter than the sweetest music to the reviving ear: “Awake! awake! thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and I will give thee light, life, glory, and immortality. Sleep no more!—Arise, put on thy beautiful garments!—My glory is rising upon thee. Go—blessed Spirit,—and, in the vesture of a new and glorified body, shine among the spirits of just men made perfect—thyself a Spirit, an immortal Spirit. Sleep no more in the arms of death; for death is subdued; and, as, like a faithful soldier, you watched with

* Psalm lxxviii. 13.

“ me

“ me in the militant state, you shall now join “ me in the triumphal. Sleep no more the “ sleep of death ; but rise, and exult in light in-“ effable !”

SECTION LVII.

On the PEACE OF GOD, that calm and composed State which is produced by the CHRISTIAN PHILOSOPHY, and is unknown to the Epicurean, Stoic, and all other Philosophy, antient and modern.

A GENERAL prospect of human life presents a scene of turbulence, of which the troubled ocean is an emblem. But there is a sweet, a peaceable, a tranquil state of self-possession, whether external circumstances are prosperous or adverse, which constitutes the most solid happiness of which human nature is capable. This enjoyment, arising from moderate desires, a regulated imagination, lively hopes, and full confidence in the Deity, is that chief good, which philosophers have vainly sought in the schools, by the strongest efforts of unassisted reason. What then can point it out, if reason, improved by science to the highest degree, has not been able to find it ? The answer is obvious. The religion of Jesus Christ offers to its sincere votaries the PEACE OF GOD, which passeth all understanding ; a kind and degree of happiness, which no language can clearly express ; which the understanding cannot adequately conceive, though the heart can feel it with the most delightful experience.

“ The

“ The peace of God,” (says the world,) “ what “ is it ?” They know it not. Many have no conception of happiness, independent of external circumstances ; the toys of childhood, protracted to age. They do not search for it in themselves, but in the eyes of the world. All their enjoyments must be violent, sensual, or, at least, OSTENTATIOUS. Admire them, talk of them, flatter them ; let the diurnal papers exhibit their names in capitals, and fashion crowd to their door ; let their equipages be splendid, and their mansions magnificent, their egress and regress recorded in the daily histories, or they sicken in the midst of health ; they pine in the midst of abundance ; the rose on their bosom loses its fragrance ; the honey on their palates its flavour. To be celebrated, even for folly, even for vice, is to them an enviable NOTORIETY ; to be unnoticed in public circles, in the midst of every real blessing and solid comfort at home, infuses a bitter into all those sweets, which God in his bounty has lavished.

But the felicity arising from the PEACE OF GOD is neither the tumultuous extasy of the fanatic, nor the noisy merriment of the prodigal. It seeks no plaudits ; it makes no parade. It blazes not out like the sudden eruptions of a volcano ; but burns like the vestal fire, clear and constant, with a warmth that invigorates, without scorching ; with a light that illuminates, without dazzling the visual faculty.

Thus desirable, how is the PEACE OF GOD to be obtained ? It is an important question. Let us enter on the research. If we enter on it with dispositions truly humble and sincere, there is little doubt but we shall experience the truth of that comfortable declaration : “ Ask, and it shall be “ given ; seek, and ye shall find.”

What

What said the wisdom of pagan antiquity, on the means of securing PEACE or tranquillity? Much that was plausible; little to the purpose.

It was the advice of an ancient philosopher: "Subject yourself to reason, and you shall be reduced to no other subjection." Experience, however, has evinced, that human reason, under a variety of circumstances, is too weak and fallible to be depended upon, for the full security of human happiness. What he vainly attributed to reason, may with justice be ascribed to religion. Religion, duly understood, and duly attended to, is capable of giving much of that freedom from passion and perturbation, to which philosophy in vain pretended. Not that I mean to arrogate too much, or claim more than truth and experience will allow, even in favour of religion. While man preserves the nature which God gave him, he must continue subject to the transient impulse of those sensations from external objects which excite passion, and disturb repose.

All I contend for is, that religion, VITAL RELIGION, the religion of the HEART, is the most powerful auxiliary of reason, in waging war with the passions, and promoting that sweet composure which constitutes the peace of God. Reason may point out what is right, but she wants AUTHORITY in the minds of most men, to enforce obedience to her commands. Here religion steps in with majestic mien, and gives the sanction of a law to the dictates of discretion.

I recommend, therefore, to him who wishes to obtain the peace of God, a diffidence in human reason, however strong by nature, and however improved by study. A confidence in it leads to that pride which God resisteth. But I mean this diffidence

diffidence to be chiefly confined to the operations of reason in religious disquisitions. Things above reason are not to be rejected as contrary to reason, but to be received with a reverential awe, and a devout submission of the understanding to the God who gave it.

He, then, who wishes to tranquillize his bosom, must have recourse to more powerful medicines than those of an empirical philosophy. Philosophy has been tried, from the earliest ages to the present hour, with little success. Philosophy is cold and inactive. She may influence and direct the understanding; but she cannot warm the affections with the love of God and virtue. SENTIMENT is necessary to impel the heart, to guide or regulate even the virtuous passions; and no sentiment is so efficacious for this purpose as the devotional. The word of God, as the strong language of scripture expresses it, is quick and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow; and is a discernor of the thoughts and intents of the heart.

From the shallow streams of philosophy, we must hasten to the living fountain of the Christian religion. It is the influence of God on the heart of man, the divine operation of the Holy Spirit on the spirit of human creatures, which alone can bestow a permanent tranquillity; that peace of God, which passeth all understanding; that peace, which no human eloquence can clearly explain; which no human sagacity can, by its own unassisted efforts, procure; but which the devout heart of the believer feels with joy and gratitude.

This is the polar influence which can alone fix the tremulous needle, and point it directly to Heaven; streaming into the heart of man an emanation of divinity.

Let us then take a view of the fruits of the Spirit, as they are beautifully described by the Apostle. The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance.—These lovely virtues have a natural tendency to produce equanimity, self-possession, a serene, placid, delightful frame of mind, such as the sages of old conceived, indeed, but could not either procure or communicate. These make a heaven on earth, and render it evident, beyond a doubt, that the true Christian, after all the boasts of the gay voluptuary, is the real MAN OF PLEASURE.

The worldly man of pleasure is indeed, for the most part, a man of pleasure only in name. His pains, upon the whole, greatly outweigh his pleasures; or his insensibility, contracted by excess, leaves him in the midst of all that luxury can spread before him, in a state very remote from the enjoyments of the temperate, humble, and sincere believer.

It would not be right to describe things in a declamatory and rhetorical manner, so as to violate the truth of representation, for the sake of maintaining even the cause of religion. But experience will justify me in asserting, that the numerous tribes in the gay and elevated circles, who pursue happiness in dissipation only, and never think of God, but to swear with levity by his name, exhibit many external signs of singular irritation, and peculiar misery. They appear to have no resources in their own bosom. They depend on precarious externals, on the will and co-operation of others, for all their pleasures. CHANGE OF PLACE is their grand remedy for their uneasy sensations.

sensations *. Like a sick man, who turns from side to side on his bed, in hope of that sleep which his fever denies, they fly to various scenes of public resort, in the midst of amusements, unamused; in the midst of pleasure, unpleased; and reluctantly return to their home, where God has given them a good inheritance. They have used, or rather abused, all their comforts. They are glutted with pleasure. Nothing has the grace of novelty to recommend it. Behold their dissatisfied countenances, and their artificial smiles, to hide them at the gay places of public amusement. Their appetite grown dull, this world affording no new joy, and the next never in their thoughts, they are, at first, the slaves of folly, and, at last, the victims of despair.

* Lucretius well describes this restlessness:

“ Quid sibi quisque velit nescire et quærere semper, “ Commutare locum, quasi onus deponere possit.
 “ Exit sæpe foras magnis ex ædibus ille,
 “ Esse domi quem pertæsum est, subitoque revertit;
 “ Quippe foris nibilo melius qui sentiat esse.
 “ Currit agens mannos ad villam, hic præcipitanter
 “ Auxilium tectis quasi ferre ardentibus instans:
 “ Ositat extemplo, tetigit cum limina villæ,
 “ Aut abit in somnum gravis; atque obliviam quærit;
 “ Aut etiam properans urbem petit, atque revisit.
 “ Hoc se quisque modo fugit: at, quum scilicet, ut fit,
 “ Effugere baud potis est, ingratis hæret, et angit.”

They know not what they would have, but are continually seeking CHANGE OF PLACE, in the hope of laying down the burden of time. Tired of home, one man leaves his noble mansion, as often as he can, and then returns to it all on a sudden; just as miserable abroad as at home. Another drives his horses full speed to his country-house, dashing along as if he had heard the house was on fire, and was hastening to extinguish the flames. He no sooner sets his foot within the doors, than he begins to yawn or falls fast asleep; striving to forget himself in slumbers;—or else he turns the horses' heads and hurries post haste up to town again. Thus every one tries to run away from himself; but when he cannot escape, he reluctantly bears the unavoidable evil, and pines, a self-tormentor, in unwilling solitude.

LUCRETIUS.

How

How different is it with him who has happily been tinctured with religion in his early age, and learned to seek, as his chief good, "the peace of God, which passeth all understanding?" Great peace have they that love thy law *. I do not affirm that the Christian religion pretends, like the arrogant philosophy of the Stoics, to place man out of the reach of evil, or to render him insensible of pain. A certain portion of evil and misery is to be the lot of every mortal; and wise purposes are effected by chastisement, when suffered to operate in its regular manner in the production of humility, godly sorrow, repentance, and amendment. But this I say, and am justified in the assertion by the scriptures of God, and by the experience of many pious believers, there is nothing which can lessen the evils of life so much, or teach a man to bear them with such fortitude, as a full dependence on the Deity, and a habit of seeking pleasure in warm yet rational devotion. It will ever be found by those who thus seek it faithfully.

It is not, indeed, to be believed, but that God, whose Providence superintends the animal and vegetable world, and the inanimate creation, should watch over the spiritual with peculiar care, and conduct it by his immediate influence. A soul, therefore, which, by piety and charity, humbly endeavours to obey the revealed will of God, and to render itself acceptable to the eye which is too pure to behold iniquity without offence, will probably be sure of peculiar regard. No evil so great shall happen to it; no misfortune so heavy shall befall it, but that a way to escape shall be opened, or a supernatural power of bearing it afforded. A ray of sunshine will beam upon it from the fountain of spiritual light, when the world presents nothing but darkness. Like the Alpine mountain, the good and devout Christian rises above the clouds, and enjoys a glorious sunshine, which erring mortals below him cannot partake. He who possesses the peace of God, may be said to resemble the halcyon, whose nest floats on the glassy sea, undisturbed by the agitation of the waves.

* Psalm cxix. 165.

Men deem themselves fortunate in obtaining the patronage of a fellow-creature like themselves, elevated by the favour of a prince, or by his own industry, above the common level. They feel themselves safe under his protection, from the evils of poverty. Yet what is the protection of man, of princes and nobles, to the protection of the Lord of Lords, the King of Kings, the Ruler of Princes? But the pious Christian believes firmly that he enjoys the unspeakable advantage. It is a continual feast to him. It is a perennial spring of living water. In adversity or prosperity, his CHIEF GOOD remains like the mountain, which cannot be moved. It is the rock of ages, on which he builds the fair fabric of his felicity.

What is there, in all the pomp of the world, and the enjoyments of luxury, the gratification of passion, comparable to the tranquil delight of a good conscience? It is the health of the mind. It is a sweet perfume, that diffuses its fragrance over every thing near it, without exhausting its store. Unaccompanied with this, the gay pleasures of the world are like brilliants to a diseased eye, music to a deaf ear, wine in an ardent fever, or dainties in the languor of an ague. To lie down on the pillow, after a day spent in temperance, in beneficence, in piety, how sweet is it! How different from the state of him, who reclines, at an unnatural hour, with his blood inflamed, his head throbbing throbbing with wine and gluttony, his heart aching with rancorous malice, his thoughts totally estranged from him who has protected him in the day, and will watch over him, ungrateful as he is, in the night season! A good conscience is, indeed, the peace of God. Passions lulled to sleep, clear thoughts, cheerful temper, a disposition to be pleased with every obvious and innocent object around; these are the effects of a good conscience; these are the things which constitute happiness; and these condescend to dwell with the poor man, in his humble cottage in the vale of obscurity. In the magnificent mansion of the proud and vain, glitter the exteriors of happiness, the gilding, the trapping, the pride, and the pomp; but in the decent habitation of piety is oftener found the downy nest of heavenly peace; that solid good, of which the parade of the vain, the frivolous, and voluptuous, is but a shadowy semblance.

I see a party, travelling, by choice, on the Sunday, (the day of rest appointed for man and beast, by the benevolent Being who made them,) with a speed that almost outstrips the wind. Whither are they hastening? To regions of delight; some place of modish resort; where the sound of the viol invites; where the song, and the dance, and the festive board, promise pleasure without alloy. Join the train awhile, and mark the event. The variety of objects dissipates care for a short time; but weariness soon ensues, and satiety converts the promised pleasure to indifference, at least, if not to pain. And now they return to their home, the seat of plenty, with countenances that by no means express satisfaction at what is just past; that satisfaction which might have been expected, considering the preparation, the expence, the haste, and the eagerness, which appeared in the commençement and progress of the fashionable excursion. Piety, charity, domestic comfort, have all been sacrificed at the shrine of Fashion; and the fickle, unfeeling deity has bestowed nothing in return, but weariness, languor, and a total disrelish of the pleasures of simplicity, the sweets of innocence, the feast of benevolence, and the enlivening ardour of devotion.

To contrast the scene, I picture a regular, respectable, religious family, spending their time, after the performance of their social, public, or professional duties, around the domestic fire-side, in peace and love. Every countenance is illumined with cheerfulness. No tedium, no exhausted spirits, no pale, ghastly visages, from the vigils of the card-table; no envious feelings, no jealousy nor rage at the sight of superior splendor. Pleased with a well-spent day, they fall on their knees before they retire to repose, and thank the Giver of all comfort for the mercies already received; and pray, with humble confidence, for protection in the night, and continuance of mercy during the remainder of life. Cheerful and refreshed, they rise in the morning, and go forth to the labours of life, chaunting the carols of pious gratitude. Here is enjoyment of existence; this is life indeed*, with a perpetual relish; not attended with the tumultuary ardours of a fever, but the gentle, pleasant warmth of sound health.

You, therefore, who, blessed by Providence with profusion of wealth, are enabled to make pleasure your constant pursuit, try the experiment, whether pleasure of the purest kind is not to be drawn from the fountains of piety and divine love. Amusements and pleasures, commonly so called,

* Hoc est vivere.

are

are not to be rigidly renounced. They are not only allowable, but desirable and useful; solacing poor human nature in its sorrows, and promoting, by temporary relaxation, the energies of virtue. But surely it is possible to retain religious principles inviolate, and to be uniformly actuated by religious sentiments, in a life occasionally diversified by cheerful, and moderate, and innocent amusements. Only keep your heart with all diligence. Let your imagination be pleased; your thoughts occasionally diverted: but let your heart be unseduced from the love of him who first loved you. Let your affections still point, like the needle to the north, wherever the vessel is blown by the winds, towards God. Your hands may be employed, your tongue employed, your feet employed, in the avocations of social life and civil society; but let your heart be at leisure for the things which belong unto your peace; which will render your life constantly cheerful, and your death as little painful as the struggles of nature will admit.

It is never improper to caution the Christian, who seeks the peace of God, against such a degree of impassioned religion as tends, by its violence, to destroy all rational devotion, or to abbreviate its continuance. There certainly are religious persons, who, through the disorder of their imagination, and the weakness of their judgment, seem not to enjoy that tranquillity, or peace of God, which religion is calculated to produce.

Gentleness and moderation contribute to the increase as well as duration of our most refined pleasures. We see nothing of extreme rigour, nothing of unnatural austerity, nothing of intemperate ardour, in the devotion of our Saviour or his disciples; so that they seem to be no less repugnant to the gospel, than to reason and philosophy.

phy. Nothing violently passionate is durable ; no, not even the ecstasies of religion. Exorbitant passion is like a flood after great rains. However it may rush in torrents for a day, it will exhaust itself, and dwindle to the shallow stream, scarcely creeping within the banks of its natural channel.

The passions are the chief destroyers of our peace ; the storms and tempests of the moral world. To extirpate them is impossible, if it were desirable. But to regulate them by habitual care, is not so difficult, and is certainly worth all our attention. Many men do evidently acquire a wonderful command of their passions, in the presence of their superiors, or when their temporal interest is concerned. And shall we not attempt it in the presence of God dwelling in us, and for an everlasting interest ?

The task is facilitated by the grace of God, which certainly co-operates with man in every virtuous endeavour. To JESUS CHRIST, then, let us have recourse, as to the best philosopher. He who said to the sea, "Be still," will calm our passions, as he smoothed the waves. Peace was the legacy which he left to his followers. Hear his bland and soothing words : "Peace I leave " with you ; my peace I give unto you ; not as " the world giveth, give I unto you." "The " work of righteousness," says Isaiah, "is peace ;
" and the effect of righteousness, quietness and
" assurance for ever." "Grace and peace be " multiplied unto you," adds St. Peter, "through " the knowledge of God, and of our Lord Jesus
" Christ."

"Not as the world giveth," says our Saviour, "give I peace." The world speaks peace, when there is no peace. Dissipation, variety of worldly business, worldly cares, worldly company, riot, noise, noise, intemperance, produce a TUMULT, which banishes reflection, but cannot cause serenity, self-possession, and composure. The sick man, who has recourse to opium and strong drink to lull his malady in a deceitful oblivion, increases his pain and his danger.

The Christian seeks peace, by seeking pardon of God by repentance. "Acquaint thyself with God, and be at peace." He seeks peace, by keeping a watch on those great destroyers of it, his passions. On these tumultuous waves he pours the oil of Christian love, and they are calm. Thus he lives;—at peace with himself, at peace with his neighbour, and at peace with his God.

Thus he lives; and when he quits this earthly scene,—(like a river, whose banks are flowery, and whose waters limpid and smooth,)—he glides, unruffled, into the ocean of eternity. Go, then, gentle Spirit, to the realms of peace, and enjoy the peace of God!—in the bosom of thy father, and our father*. Very pleasant hast thou been unto us†, during the time of thy sojourning here. Dove-like were thy manners; for the Spirit, which descended like a dove, inspired thee with every amiable disposition, and above all, with the LOVE OF PEACE, national and public, as well as internal: and BLESSED ARE THE PEACE-MAKERS; theirs shall be the peace of God which passeth all understanding, in the KINGDOM OF HEAVEN.

In the kingdoms of the earth, indeed, there is seldom any lasting peace. What Christian but must drop a tear over the fertile realms of Christendom crimsoned with human blood; shed at the instigation of the spirit of APOLLION, or the DESTROYER, taking his abode in hearts which have

* John. xx. 17.

† 2 Sam. i. 26.

rejected the HOLY GHOST, the spirit of love, the God of peace ! May the rulers of the world receive the Spirit of Christ, and heal the wounds of the PEOPLE ; so shall they experience, in the hour of their own distress, the peace of God which passeth all understanding, and their crowns shall be AMARANTHINE.

SECTION LVIII.

General Reflections on HAPPINESS.—ERRORS in the Pursuit of it.—No sublunary Happiness perfect.—Christ's Invitation to the wretched.—CHRISTIAN PHILOSOPHY affords the highest earthly Satisfaction.—Its SUMMUM BONUM is a State of GRACE, or the Enjoyment of Divine Favour.

TO what purpose are laboured declamations on the misery of man ? He can want no studied proofs of a wretchedness which he sees in others, and feels in his own bosom. To expatiate on the symptoms of a disease, without pointing out a cure or an alleviation, is only to add to the pain, by increasing the impatience, of the sufferer.

After all the melancholy pictures of human life, it must be allowed, that there is much comfort in the world, blended with its misery. Look abroad, from the library into real life, and you will see a general appearance of cheerfulness. Though clouds intervene, sunshine predominates. The labourer and mechanic chaunt over their daily toil ; and though they pause only to wipe the sweat off their brow, return to their work, after a short short but hearty meal, or sweet slumbers on a bed of straw, not only without a murmur, but with alacrity.

The prospect of reward at the close of a laborious day, the vicissitudes of rest and labour, the succession of ideas in active employment, the warmth and agitation of the animal spirits consequent on exertion, superinduce a delightful oblivion of care, and render the state of those who are supposed to be the least happy, the poor and laborious, frequently most pleasurable.

Nor let the higher ranks among us be enviously and malignantly misrepresented. Many in the higher ranks devote their time to business and pleasure alternately, and though the harp and the viol, the tabret and pipe, and wine, are in their feasts *; yet some of them, guided by prudence, moderation, and piety, take a delight, at the same time, in regarding the work of the Lord, and considering the operation of his hands †; suffering neither pleasure nor business to interrupt their endeavour to improve in grace, and to exercise themselves in works of devotion and charity. With respect to CHARITY, which distinguishes this age and nation above all nations on the face of the earth, by whom are the great establishments for all infirmities and casualties raised and supported, but by the rich and noble, by successful men in business, who most benevolently endeavour to communicate the happiness to which they were born, or with which Providence has blessed their exertions? Happy in themselves, they endeavour to deserve or sanctify their prosperity, by imitating him who gave it, in acts of most disinterested beneficence. For a proof of this, look into our public diaries, and the registers of great charities; and see how eagerly the rich and great contribute to their support.

* Isa. v. 12.

† Ibid.

So that, upon the whole, there is certainly an appearance of goodness and of joy on the face of human affairs; and this appearance, in many cases, is, most certainly, supported by reality. The world abounds with good as well as evil. Our own disposition and discontent too often poison and embitter the rich repast.

It is indeed evident that there is more good than evil in the world. Plenty is certainly more common than scarcity; health than sickness; ease than pain. And this is so far confirmed by experience, as to render the descriptions of human misery, which we read in declamatory harangues, worthy of little credit and attention. Few, comparatively, know what it is to be completely miserable. Who of us, in this country, does not every day enjoy some solid comfort? A vast majority is warmly clothed, plentifully fed, and accommodated with a house for shelter, and a bed for repose.

Yet let the balance be held evenly. There is, we all experience, an abundance of evil in the world; and it is aggravated and increased by fear, and the activity of a lively imagination.

It is true also, that the best of our pleasures and enjoyments are rather amusive, than perfectly and durably satisfactory. For who ever declared himself, in the midst of grandeur, pleasure, opulence, happy to the utmost extent of his wishes? Who but, in some moments, has felt a sentiment of discontent? Who ever said, "I am now in that settled state of enjoyment and perfect contentment, that I conceive not a wish of addition to it; I look not to a future day for an increase: I acquiesce; free at once from hope
" and

“and from fear?” An involuntary sigh rises in the height of our prosperity.

I shall think myself not uselessly employed in the endeavour to discover the causes of man's failure in search of satisfaction. What is it that dashes his sweetest and most plentiful cup with a bitter mixture?

In the first place, man raises his expectations too high; beyond what nature and experience justify; when he ventures to promise himself any happiness without defect, and without abatement; a sun without spot; a sky without a cloud. The world is not our home. The world is now old; and the experiment of attaining to perfection of happiness has been tried by every individual that ever existed in it. Many have left on record an account of their experiments, and an uniform avowal of disappointment. He, therefore, that would taste the happiness allowed to human nature, must learn to take aim at marks within his reach, to be duly sensible of little advantages and common blessings, daily exemption from evil, from pain, from debt, from extreme want, from infamy, from exile, from imprisonment. How much happier is he who has a sufficiency of food, of raiment, a comfortable house, and a warm bed, than millions of the human race! Yet these things are little thought of by those who murmur at the evils of life, and pine with the misery of their own situation. Something unpossessed still torments; yet all wish to APPEAR happy.

Many things which, in the midst of our complaints, we possess and enjoy in security, would perhaps render half of our fellow-creatures rapturously delighted, though they, who were born to them, pay them not the least attention, in the eagerness of reaching after something more, something higher, something better, to be enjoyed at a future day ; that day, which never comes, to mortal man. The possession of our SENSES entire, of our limbs uninjured, of knowledge and skill, of friends and companions, is often overlooked, though it would be the ultimate wish of many, who, as far as we can judge, deserve it as much as ourselves.

N 6

thing

Many always compare themselves with those who are above them, without once looking into the vale below, where thousands stand gazing at them with envy and admiration. By this unfortunate comparison, their own good things lose, in their opinion, much of their value, and sometimes become totally contemptible.

When we consider the number and variety of evils, almost intolerable, in the life of man, we should learn to esteem every disaster incident to human nature, which has not yet fallen to our lot, as a just cause of self congratulation, complacency, and gratitude. But, through ENVY, we turn from the misfortunes of others ; and think only of those advantages which give them a superiority over our own condition. If we see a man deaf, or dumb, or blind, or lame, or poor, or in disgrace, we do not derive comfort from the consideration of our own exemption from his defects and calamities ; but if we observe another adorned with beauty, endued with strength, elevated to a high rank, or loaded with riches, we secretly repine that we have not been equally blessed with worldly prosperity.

But let us consider how many there are, who would envy every one who has but health and liberty. Go into an hospital. Visit a poor-house. Inspect a prison. Compare your own health, your own competency, your own liberty, hard as you deem deem your lot, with the friendless wretch, who lies in the agony of pain, or languor of disease, with no help but the cold hand of OFFICIAL charity. No kind relative to sooth with his bland voice, to close his eyes, and shed a tear on his departure. Compare your lot with his who is loaded with chains, where the iron enters his soul, in a cold and damp dungeon. Compare it with that of your poorer neighbours, at the next door. Compare it with that of all the sons and daughters of affliction, a large family—every where to be found.

Men are, indeed, too apt to despise what are called little advantages, common comforts, daily pleasures, hourly conveniencies; whereas they are often of the highest importance; as the general happiness of life is usually made up of particulars, which appear minute, but the sum of which makes a great total.—We wait till to-morrow to be happy; alas! why not to-day? Shall we be younger? Are we sure we shall be healthier? Shall we see better, hear better, taste better? Look at some aged miser, and judge. Then why cannot we be happy to-day, with health, a competency, and a clear conscience?

We are unwilling to be satisfied with the pleasures of simplicity, and the delights of nature. The beasts around us are contented. The lark soars, and sings in exultation; but man, forgetful of nature, must have recourse to art, to procure satisfaction; and things seem to have little relish, which are not seasoned by difficulty of attainment. The greater part of worldlings, especially gamblers, esteem mere tranquillity of mind, and ease of body, a state of insipidity.

But, considering the number of evils in life, man should learn to esteem every one which he has escaped, a just cause of self-congratulation and of gratitude. The absence of evil is a real good. Peace, quiet, exemption from pain, should be a continual feast. The aching of a tooth may deprive us of all complacency in the midst of plenty and magnificence. A fit of the gout or stone may make a crown of gold and emeralds, a crown of thorns. Then while we have no pain, no ach, no sickness, why do we not enjoy our tranquillity with pious exultation?
of

Here seems to be the grand error. There is a more general desire to appear happy, than to be so. Men live in the eyes of their neighbours. They wish to possess a glittering happiness, careless of its solidity. They are desirous of being envied, talked of; and, in reaching after the shadow, they drop the substance.

Such, and many more, are the mistakes of men, in the pursuit of happiness. They all originate from a desertion of truth and simplicity; from a neglect of God and grace; from vanity, pride, folly, and vice.

But even the wise, the virtuous, the religious, and the comparatively happy, are still no more than men; and, being men, are subject to much real misery, to bodily pains, diseases, infirmity, decay, and worldly losses and crosses. The gardens of the world produce only deciduous flowers. Perennial ones must be sought in the delightful regions of Heaven. Roses without thorns are the growth of Paradise alone.

Thither then let us repair. And, happily, we are called by an invitation, no less urgent than kind and merciful. "Come unto me," says a friendly voice, "all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest*." Let us consider the words properly, and allow them their full weight upon our hearts. The Redeemer of mankind, commissioned from the Creator, utters, from his own mouth, the gracious summons, "Come unto me." As if he had said:

* Matt. xi. 28.

"Your own wisdom, your own endeavours, unassisted, are insufficient to secure your happiness, and rescue you from misery. Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." And who is there among us that does not labour? and who is there that is not heavy laden? and who does not want rest in the pilgrimage of life? The burden of our sins, the burden of our diseases, the burden of our years, press heavily on us, and gladly would many resign their lives in weariness, if there were no danger of a world unknown; where heavier burdens may await him who impatiently throws down the load of life.

Thanks be to God that Jesus Christ will either lighten our load, or give us strength to bear it. He has reconciled us to God; he has taught us to consider our Maker as our friend and father; and that all things will work together for our good. "Who will shew us any good?" Jesus Christ has shewn us our SUPREME GOOD.

At his departure from us, he left us not alone; but sent his Comforter to us—the Holy Spirit of God; who will continue with all true Christians, even to the end of the world. It is he who preserves a lively, energetic devotion in us; and not only sanctifies and comforts, but illuminates our souls with the beams of grace. The happiness of man, after all that has been said upon it, depends upon a participation of this holy assistance; upon the divine Paraclete, the God of Consolation : and the misery of man is SPIRITUAL DESERTION.

* Psalm iv. 6.

Here then let us rest. Adieu to the distraction of philosophy ; the never-ceasing disputes of unassisted reason ; the dogmatical decisions of learned pride and sophistical vanity. To be happy, (Christianity teaches us,) we must be blessed with the presence of the Holy Spirit. In adversity, in prosperity, in sickness, and in health, our joys will be pure, our sorrow lightened with this holy emanation of the Deity in our bosoms. Natural evil we must feel ; moral evil, and its effects, we shall often experience ; but there will still remain in our hearts, if regenerated, a source of sweet enjoyment, of which no external circumstances can utterly deprive us.

The method of obtaining this blessing, is to perform our duty to ourselves, our neighbours, and our God, with pure hearts, and a sincere desire to conform to the will of our Maker. Much time must be given to devotion ; more to the offices of charity ; much to works of industry in our calling or profession ; while some may be indulged to innocent diversion. The heart will thus be renovated, and that change produced in our dispositions, which is termed, in scripture, the becoming a new man ; and, in the language of theology, regeneration.

Little do they know, who are involved in the continual hurry and dissipation of the world, of this wonderful change in human nature, and its heightening effect on the enjoyment of life. Business and diversions can afford no delight comparable to the sweet sensations of a soul composed and tranquillized by divine grace. In this state, a charming serenity diffuses itself over the mind, which becomes like those happy climes of poetry, where where every breeze is gentle as a zephyr, the spring perpetual, and the earth teems, at the same time, with flowers of the finest hue, and fruits of the most delicious flavour. Nothing sublunary, indeed, is perfect; but there is every reason to believe, that the state of the regenerated Christian approaches as nearly to the bliss of Heaven, as it is possible, while the soul is incumbered with a mortal body.

We set out in search of happiness, and here we have found it. The question "who will shew us any good *?" is now answered. The CHIEF GOOD of man is a state of grace. Other pretensions to it are like shadows to the substance; which they may resemble in shape, while they want its essence, its duration, its solidity. What we have found let us never lose. Let us build upon a rock. Let us daily grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Thus shall our happiness in this life, founded, as it will be, in piety, virtue, and the consequent favour of God, rise to more perfect happiness in a future state, where the passions and appetites of a mortal body shall not weigh down the pure ethereal Spirit that, in its present state, with wings all too feeble, continually aspires at its native clime.

Come then, ye who have wandered, like bleating sheep, distressed and famished, without a shepherd, come to Jesus Christ, to the shepherd of your souls, who shall feed you in a green pasture, and by the river side. Come unto him, for he calls you, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and he shall give you rest; rest, in your passage through this turbulent scene; and not only rest,

• Psalm iv.

but

but fulness of joy at his right hand, when your wearied bodies shall lie down in the peaceful grave.

SECTION LIX.

Apologetical Conclusion; with a Recapitulation, and Addition of a few Particulars respecting the preceding Subjects.

THE world, on a superficial view of it, presents an appearance of gaiety. Deeply engaged in the pursuit of gain, honour, and amusement, few men would lament, like Calypso in Telemachus, if they were immortal, and doomed to remain, in everlasting youth and health, on this low orb, wretched as it is represented. But as all are conscious that this is impossible, the next endeavour is to drown thought in the whirlpools of dissipation. Most persons, however, choose to be called Christians, and would be not a little disgusted with the officious monitor, who should venture to suggest to them that, as they seldom or never bestow on Christianity the least solicitude, they can have no just pretensions to the name.

But busy as men are, in pursuits foreign to piety, it is certain, that after a few short years, the principal concern of the proudest, bravest, and fairest of the sons and daughters of Adam, will be religion. To that friend, whom many slight in the season of youth, health, and prosperity, they will (secretly, perhaps, but eagerly) fly for succour, in the time of age, sorrow, sickness, and death.

death. What, indeed, is man, in his most flourishing state? What, the most admired and distinguished individual of us all, but an infirm, dependent creature, subject, from the cradle, to ten thousand evils; doomed gradually, often painfully, to decay, and certainly, perhaps most deplorably, to die? Second childhood, idiotism, insanity, palsy, blindness, deafness, lameness! ye are powerful preachers to those who mark well your ravages among the sons of men, once most highly distinguished for strength, comeliness, genius, all that charms the heart, and dazzles the imagination with transient brilliancy.

“Think, mortal,” says the poet, “what it is to die.” Think also, I add, what it is to see those whom we love, die before us; die, agonized with pain, after languishing with lingering disease; to attend them, with all the blandishments of affection, without being able to contribute to their ease, or add one moment to their existence. Is there any partaker of human nature, however thoughtless, who, when he feels, actually brought home to his own bosom, or to his own family, the real calamities, the sore distresses of life, will not be anxious to seek comfort of religion, to acquaint himself with God, and be at peace with him? His prospect in the world is forlorn and dismal. It is a barren land, where no water is. Though it flattered him in better days, it now turns away from him in the hour of his utmost need. Indeed, if it were still inclined to sooth him, it has no cordials for his heart; no balsams for his wounded spirit. To Heaven only he can look for comfort*, and there he

* As examples of men well known, and recently in the land of the living, teach more effectually than any precepts and admonitions, he will not seek it in vain. Religion has confessedly furnished a sweet solace, under extreme affliction,
I have

I have selected the two following, to shew how men of the world and men of pleasure are affected by disease and the decays of age.

The following verses, a translation of a Psalm, by the late Mr. COLMAN, who had been much conversant with the gay world, exhibit the state of mind to which the liveliest wits and men of fashion may be reduced, on a sudden, by sickness, by a STROKE OF THE PALSY, or any other malady.

“ Psalm the 39th imitated in blank verse :

“ I will take heed, I said, I will take heed,
 “ Nor trespass with my TONGUE ; will keep my mouth
 “ As with a bridle, while the sinner's near.
 “ —Silent I mus'd, and e'en from good refrain'd,
 “ But full of pangs, my heart was hot within me ;
 “ The lab'ring fire burst forth, and loos'd my tongue.
 “ Lord, let me know the measure of my days ;
 “ Make me to know how weak, how frail I am !
 “ My days are as a span, mine age as nothing,
 “ And man is altogether vanity.
 “ Man walketh in an empty shade ; in vain
 “ Disquieting his soul, he heaps up riches, “ Knowing not who shall gather them. And now “ Where rests my hope, O Lord ! it rests with thee.
 “ Forgive me mine offences ! Make me not
 “ A scorn unto the foolish ! I was dumb,
 “ And open'd not my mouth, for 'twas thy doing.
 “ O, take thy STROKE away ! thy hand destroys me,
 “ When, with rebukes, thou chastenest man for sin,
 “ Thou mak'st his beauty to consume away :
 “ Dissembler preys upon him, as a moth
 “ Fretting a garment. Ah, what then is man ?
 “ Ev'ry man living is but vanity !
 “ Hear, hear my prayer, O Lord ! O hear my cry !
 “ Pity my tears ! for I am in thy sight
 “ But as a stranger and a sojourner,
 “ As all my fathers were. O, spare me then,
 “ Though but a little, to regain my strength,
 “ Ere I be taken hence, and seen no more !”

COLMAN.

Let us hear also LORD CHESTERFIELD, a complete man of the world. The following is an extract from one of his letters :

“ I have run,” says he, “ the silly rounds of business and pleasure, and have done with them all. I have enjoyed all the pleasures of the world, and consequently know their futility, and do
 “ not affliction, when the heart sickened at the pleasures of the world, and viewed its pageantries with contempt. Bitterer than wormwood has been the cup of adversity; but religion has infused a honied drop into it, which has overcome the bitterness: gloomy as midnight has been the lowering sky, but religion has tinged the clouds with gold and purple, and opened a prospect of the blue expanse.

But what religion? There is no religion but the Christian, which, in the present state of society,

“not regret their loss. I appraise them at their real value, which is, in truth, very low. Whereas those that have not experienced, always over-rate them. They only see their gay outside, and are dazzled with the glare. But I have been behind the scenes. I have seen all the coarse pulleys and dirty ropes which exhibit and move the gaudy machines; and I have seen and smelt the tallow candles which illuminate the whole decoration, to the astonishment and admiration of the ignorant audience.

“When I reflect on what I have seen, what I have heard, and what I have done, I can hardly persuade myself that all that frivolous hurry of bustle and pleasure of the world had any reality; but I look upon all that is passed, as one of those romantic dreams, which opium commonly occasions; and I do by no means desire to repeat the nauseous dose, for the sake of the fugitive dream.

“Shall I tell you that I bear this melancholy situation with that meritorious constancy and resignation which most people boast of? No; for I really cannot help it. I bear it, because I must bear it, whether I will or no!—I think of nothing but killing time the best way I can, now that he is become my enemy.—It is my resolution to SLEEP in the carriage during the remainder of the journey.”

“You see,” says Bishop Horne, remarking on this passage, “in how poor, abject, and unpitied a condition, at a time when he most wanted help and comfort, the world left him and he left the world.”

Compare these words with those of another person, who took his leave of the world in a very different manner.

“I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight; I have finished my course; I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, will give me at that day.”

St. PAUL.

can

can make any claim to general reception. There is none but the Christian, which can afford the smallest consolation. Explode Christianity, as some pretenders to benevolence seem to wish, and you rob the blind of their surest guide, and the wretched of their best friend and protector. You take away the staff of age, the chart and compass of youth, the pillow of pain, the grand column and ornament of human life. Man degenerates, without it, to a brute of superior sagacity to do mischief, and superior sensibility to suffer pain.

But there are many, and those able and distinguished men in the business of the world, who appear to reject Christianity entirely. Many give it no attention * ; but contented with the decencies of life, and, coldly complying with outward forms, claim a merit in submitting quietly to its ordinances, and making no open opposition to it. Others profess to believe all religion equally true, equally false, and equally useful to the politician. Most of these are probably driven, at last, by their distress, in the evil days, and in the anguish of their hearts, to seek the aid of her, whom they despised or neglected in prosperity, and to take refuge, during the storm, in the shelter of the temple. But is it not desirable, in every stage of life, to be under the protection of one, who is found so faithful a friend in the last stage? And is it not the part of every truly benevolent man, if opportunities offer, and, more particularly, if his PROFESSIONAL DUTY not only justifies, but demands, an active interference in promoting the solid happiness of others, to endeavour to persuade

* They know nothing about it, and therefore cannot desire or study it. IGNOTI NULLA CUPIDO.—The people perish through lack of knowledge. Hosea, iv. 6. The Indians prefer any bauble, which rattles and looks fine, to their mines of gold.

his

his fellow-creatures to seek, in the most effectual manner, the light and consolation of Christianity. He can in no possible mode contribute so much to the melioration of society, and the improvement of the human race *. In a neighbouring country might lately be seen the misery consequent on renouncing Christianity. Mercy and Justice fled awhile from the land, together with the Gospel. God avenged his cause in a most awful manner; and the people now seem sensible of the scourge †.

To stop the progress of infidelity, to resuscitate the dormant spirit of vital religion, the true nature of Christianity must be plainly pointed out to the mass of the people, the GREAT as well as the vulgar; the GREAT, I say, to whom, from thoughtlessness, and immersion in sensuality, it is often little known †, however it may be professed. Christianity, indeed, it may be suspected, is too imperfectly understood, even by scholars, philosophers, and statesmen of the first rank, and the greatest celebrity ‡.

To

* Machiavel, whom some will reverence who despise the most learned theologist by profession, Machiavel himself says, "There is no surer prognostic of impending ruin in any state, than to see divine worship neglected or despised."

Vol. iii. p. 53. London, 1775.

† Hence the attempt in France to revive religion under the name of THEOPHILANTHROPISM: and this LOVE OF GOD AND MAN will, it is hoped, restore in time true Christianity.

‡ What is the GOSPEL? "The record that God hath given to us eternal life, and that life is in his Son." 1 John, v. 2. It is a question of prime importance. Yet there are able men, and men of singular address and dexterity in all political and commercial business, who perhaps never asked the question with seriousness; and who seem to be merely novices, or downright Ignoramuses, in the school of Christ.

† Let such persons consider the economy of grace, as thus briefly displayed by Bishop Warburton, who, nevertheless, was a great opposer of the true doctrine of divine energy; and who, on that account, may have the more weight with many.

"The

To call the attention of men to Christianity, and to render its true genius and nature better known *, is the scope of this little book; a book by

“ The blessed Jesus came into the world to declare the good-will
 “ of our heavenly Father to the forfeited posterity of Adam. He “ testified the truth of his mission by amazing miracles; and sealed
 “ the redemption of mankind, by the more amazing devotion of “ himself to an ignominious death.

“ But as the redemption, so generally procured, could only operate on particulars, under certain circumstances of faith and obedience, very repugnant to our corrupted nature, the blessed Jesus, on his leaving the world, promised his followers his intercession with the Father, to send another divine person—the Holy Ghost, called the Spirit of Truth, and the Comforter—who, agreeably to the import of those names, should co-operate with us in establishing faith, and in perfecting obedience; or, in other words, should sanctify us to redemption.

“ This is a succinct account of the œconomy of grace; entirely consonant to our best conceptions of the nature of God, and the condition of man. For if man was to be reinstated in a free gift, justly forfeited, we cannot but suppose that as, on the one hand, it might be restored on what conditions best pleased the giver; so, on the other, God would graciously provide, that it should not be bestowed in vain.

“ An atonement, therefore, was to be made for the offended majesty of the Father, and this was the work of the Son; and a remedy was to be provided for the miserable condition of man, which hindered the atonement from producing its effect; and this was the office of the Holy Ghost; so that both were joint workers in the great business of reconciling God to man.

“ The office of the Holy Ghost is to ENLIGHTEN THE UNDERSTANDING, AND TO RECTIFY THE WILL.”

Bp. WARBURTON'S Sermons.

This is the testimony of an adversary, as he seems, in his Doctrine of Grace.

“ The Christian that rejects, reproaches, and writes against the necessity of immediate divine inspiration, pleads the whole cause of infidelity.—If ye will hold no higher a regeneration than can be had by a few drops of cold water sprinkled on the face, Gods of wood and stone are good enough for such an elementary priesthood.”

LAW.

“ In many countries called Christian, neither Christianity, nor its evidence, are fairly laid before men; and in places where both are, there appear to be some, who have very little attended to either; and who reject Christianity with a SCORN proportionate by no means intended to promote the interest, or gratify the pride, of any particular division or subdivision of Christians, but to serve the common cause of all human beings, by maintaining the divine origin, describing the real essence and energy, and diffusing the powerful efficacy of that SUBLIME PHILOSOPHY, which, under the immediate operation of an all-wise and benign Deity, promises to tranquillize life, and conduct man through paths of peace to realms of eternal felicity.

What then is the principle of this philosophy, which gives it a decided superiority over all that has been taught in the groves of Academus, the Portico and the Lyceum? It is (as I hope has been evinced in the preceding pages) a BEAM OF LIGHT from the FATHER OF LIGHTS; a LUMEN DE LUMINE, LIGHT OF LIGHT; the breath of the power of God, restoring degenerate human nature to that image which it lost at the fall, and re-establishing it in primeval dignity. The Holy Ghost, it appears, is the divine Being, now and for ever engaged in effecting this happy renovation; in producing a change, which no human wisdom could ever accomplish, without supernatural assistance; without that GIFT, which our Lord gave to men after his ascension.

The elegant refinements of human philosophy may furnish a pleasing amusement for those who possess the advantages of a classical education, and of literary leisure. The Christian Philosophy alone is calculated for ALL mankind; this alone can

“ to their INATTENTION; and yet are by no means without understanding in other matters.”

Ep. BUTLER.

“ I have been so long conversant with the classics,” said Dr. Conyers Middleton, “ that I grow squeamish when I come to the scriptures.”

o

“ bring

bring peace * at the last ; peace, during the continuance of life, as well as at its close ; a transcendent peace, called, in scripture, the peace of God, which passeth all understanding ; and which certainly constitutes that SUPREME GOOD OF MAN, in selecting which, human philosophy could never yet finally agree. Happily, it is a kind of philosophy, to which every human being, consistently with God's equity, may attain ; requiring not cultured intellects, nor a life of academical seclusion, but faithful, fervent prayer, accompanied with sincere, though imperfect obedience. " If ye, being " evil," says our Saviour, " know how to give " good gifts unto your children, how much more " shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit " to them that ask him ?" Nothing is to be desired by mortal man, in comparison with this GIFT, the supply of the Spirit of Jesus Christ †. The END, it appears, to be pursued by this philosophy, is the attainment of the Spirit's influence ; the MEANS, prayer and obedience. Such is the sum and substance of CHRISTIAN PHILOSOPHY ; a title ‡ which I have

* " I would," said the great GROTIUS, whose book, ' On the Truth of the Christian Religion,' is recommended to all young students, though, I believe, it never convinced any man living ; " I " would," said he, a little before he died, " give all my learning " and honour, for the plain integrity and innocence of JEAN " URICK ;" a poor illiterate neighbour of his, who spent much of his time in prayer, and was an honest plain man, and industrious in his calling. JOHN EDWARDS.

† Phil. i. 19.

‡ This name Christianity bears in the writings of some of the ancient fathers. Thus Justin Martyr, speaking of Christianity, says,

" Εἰς τὴν οὐτὴν ΦΙΛΟΣΟΦΙΑ μείζον κλημα ἢ τιμωτάτου θίω, ὥστε " πρὸς αὐτὴν καὶ συνίησιν ἡμᾶς μόνον ἢ οὐκ ὡς ἀληθῶς οὗτοι εἰσιν " οἱ φιλοσοφία τὸν νῦν προσεχόμενοι." Dialog. cum Tryph.

He adds, that he found this philosophy, meaning the CHRISTIAN, the only philosophy that was useful and to be depended upon.

" Ταύτην μόνον εὕρισκον φιλοσοφίαν ἀσφαλῆς ἢ συμφέρει." IBID. Iſidore

I have chosen, because, from a strange perverseness, a great part of the world, too often guided by names, is willing to listen to philosophy, while it closes the iron doors of prejudice against the voice of religion.

The divine energy announced to mankind in the glad tidings of the Gospel, under the name of GIFTS and GRACE, operating, now and for ever more, on every human heart prepared to admit it, appears, from what has been advanced in these pages, to be the LIVING, EVERLASTING GOSPEL, still accompanying the written word, and conveying illumination, sanctification, consolation. It would not cease to operate, being sent down from Heaven on our Lord's ascension, even if it were possible that ink and paper, by whose instrumentality the written word is transmitted, were utterly lost. It originates from Omnipotence, and cannot entirely rely, for its continuance or effect, on means merely human, weak, contingent, and pe-

Isidore also terms Christianity the NEW and evangelical philosophy.

" Η ΝΕΑ ἡ ΕΥΑΓΓΕΛΙΚΗ ΦΙΛΟΣΟΦΙΑ." EPIST. lib. 4.

And in another place he calls it the heavenly philosophy.

" ΟΥΡΑΝΙΟΣ ΦΙΛΟΣΟΦΙΑ." EPIST. lib. 5.

Several other fathers call it the Christian Philosophy.

Vide Sozomen. Eccl. Hist. lib. 5. cap. 12.

And let it be remembered, that,

" Non tam discendo, quam PATIENDO divina, MENS PERFICITUR HUMANA."

" Homines ideo falluntur, quod aut religionem suscipiunt, omisâ sapientiâ, aut sapientiæ soli student, omisâ religione, cum alterum sine altero esse non possit verum."

The human mind is perfected not so much by learning divine things, as by passively receiving the impressions of Divinity.

Men are deceived on this account, because they either adopt religion to the neglect of philosophy; or study philosophy alone, to the neglect of religion; whereas the one without the other cannot be what it strictly ought to be. LACTANTIUS de falsa Sapient. lib. 3. riſhable. He who once views the goſpel of JESUS CHRIST in this light; he who conſiders it as a vital influence from Heaven, and recognizes its energy on his heart, as he will do, in conſequence of prayer and obedience, will want no external proof of the truth and excellence of Chriſtianity. He will have the witneſs in himſelf; and ſtand in no need of the ſchoolmen's folios, the verbal ſubtleties of the critic, or the acrimonious diſputes of the polemic. He will find, that ſome of the moſt learned men, the moſt voluminous writers on theological ſubjects, were TOTALLY IGNORANT OF CHRISTIANITY. He will find that they were ingenious heathen philoſophers, aſſuming the name of Chriſtians, and forcibly paganizing Chriſtianity, for the ſake of pleaſing the world, of extending their fame, and enjoying ſecular honours and lucrative pre-eminence*.

“ Godly perſons,” that is, Chriſtian philoſophers, are deſcribed, in thoſe articles which all churchmen have moſt ſolemnly aſſented to, as “ ſuch as FEEL in themſelves the Spirit of Chriſt, “ mortifying the works of the fleſh, and drawing

* “ There are thoſe,” ſays the Apoſtle, “ who ſeek THEIR OWN, and not the things of Jeſus Chriſt.” PHIL. ii. 21.

Such as theſe are called by Ignatius χρηματωροι, dealers and chapmen in Chriſt. Unprofitable TRUTHS they will have no more to do with, than traders with unfaleable commodities. “ They would be anything-ARIANS, or nothing-ARIANS,” ſaid a facetious obſerver of men and manners, “ for fat pluralities, lazy prebends, proud deanries, and courtly biſhoprics;” but every church muſt fall which leans on ſuch rotten props as theſe.

In our commercial country, religion is often a branch of trade, and when borough intereſt prevails, a tolerably good speculation.

Biſhop Horne ſays, “ Thoſe clergymen, who betray the cauſe of their Maſter, in order to be promoted in the church, are guilty of “ the worſt kind of ſimony, and pay their ſouls for the purchaſe of “ their preferment.”

“ up

"up their minds to high and heavenly things." He who feels the Spirit in him, will be conscious of possessing the pearl of great price, and will lock it up in the sanctuary of his heart, as his richest treasure, never to be despoiled of it by the seducing arts of false philosophy; never to exchange that pure gold, which is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever, for the base metal of worldly politicians, who may endeavour, as they have done, to make truth itself alter her immutable nature, for the varying purposes of temporary ambition. Those doctrines of Christianity, which were true under the first Charles, will be considered, notwithstanding the subtle attempts of politicians, equally true under the abandoned profligacy of a second; or in subsequent reigns, when it was discovered by the court divines, that Christianity was as old as the creation, and the religion of grace a mere republication of the religion of nature*.

The

* This, though the pious Sherlock's doctrine, is nearly the same with the infidel Voltaire's, though not quite so honourable to Christianity.

"Notre religion révélée n'est même, et ne pouvoit être, que cette loi naturelle perfectionnée?"—Our revealed religion is not, and indeed could not be any thing else but the law of nature advanced to perfection.

Discours sur le Théisme, par M. de VOLTAIRE.

Of preaching natural religion for Christianity, let us hear the opinion of two other celebrated divines, and pious men.

"Scarce any thing," says Dr. Trapp, "has of late years been more prejudicial to religion, than the neglect of the THEOLOGICAL part of it, properly so called: and it is very greatly to be lamented, that some writers, even of our own church, out of an undue terror, in opposing some doctrines of Calvin, have run into the other extreme, and have too little regarded the necessary doctrines of religion."

They have dwelt upon the agenda, and totally neglected the enda.

"To preach practical sermons, as they are called, that is, sermons upon VIRTUES and VICES, without inculcating those great scripture truths, of redemption, GRACE, and the like, which alone can incite and enable us to forsake sin, and follow after righteousness—

The substance of Christianity can survive the wreck of empires, the demolition of temples made with hands, and the dismissal of a superstitious or a time-serving priesthood. The living temple of the heart, where the Holy Spirit fixes his shrine, will stand unimpaired, amidst the fallen columns of marble. The kingdom of Heaven will remain unshaken, amidst all the convulsions of this changeable globe. We are told, that the gates of hell shall not prevail against it; and, though it should happen, in any country of Christendom, that the rulers should be infidels, and the visible church abolished; yet while there are human creatures left alive in it, the CHURCH of CHRIST may still flourish. The doctrine of grace is the only doctrine which tends to preserve Christianity in the world, independent of the caprice and PRIDE* of statesmen and philosophers, or the wickedness of the people. Who shall be impious enough to “nesci—what is it but to put together the wheels, and set the hands of a watch, forgetting the SPRING which is to make them all “go?” Bishop HORNE and Dr. TRAPP, in his Preface to Preservative.

What Quintilian said, may be applied to moral preaching, when unaccompanied with evangelical.

“Nunc vero quæ velut propria philosophiæ afferuntur passim tractamus omnes: quis enim modo de iusto, æquo, ac bono, non et vir PESSEMUS loquitur.”—But now, those topics which are asserted to be peculiar to Philosophy, all of us (Rhetoricians as well as Philosophers) treat of indiscriminately; for who, even the worst of men, hesitates to prate about the JUST, the ÆQUITABLE, and the GOOD?

QUINT. Proœmium.

* “With great worldly wisdom, there is always great pride, the greatest adversary to true and sanctified Christian knowledge. All the skill that men so minded can attain to in heavenly matters, is but like lessons got by rote. It must be quite forgotten, or, at least, utterly renounced and laid aside, before we can be admitted into the school of Christ.” Dr. THOMAS JACKSON, vol. i. b. 2. c. 14. 1673.

maintain

maintain that God cannot preserve, by his own methods, his own dispensation?

Civil and ecclesiastical power in union, together with the assistance of early education, may, indeed, retain, in a nation, the forms and the name of Christianity; but "the proper force of religion, that force which subdues the mind, which awes the conscience, and influences the private conduct, as well as the public," will only be preserved by a vital experimental sense* of the divine energy of the Holy Ghost, whom we declare, with one voice, in our churches, whenever we repeat the Nicene creed, to be the "LORD AND GIVER OF LIFE."

I have endeavoured to diffuse this vital, experimental sense, from a conviction that it is peculiarly desirable at a time when infidelity is said to increase, beyond the example of any former age. But I know that I oppose prejudices deeply rooted, and far extended. These doctrines are frowned upon by men in high stations†. I know that our Saviour has predicted, what experience has abundantly verified, that the preaching and teaching of the TRUE gospel will ever create enemies in the world‡. The modes of persecution differ in dif-

* "Let it be considered that man, besides the benefit of reason to direct him, is blessed with the advantage of something, if not always equivalent, certainly not inferior to the highest refinements of INSTINCT in lower animals; and from the same fountain, I mean GRACE, the grace of God; which, if any one be hardy, and UNPHILOSOPHICAL, and unchristian enough to deny, I shall not attempt to confute him; only desire him to consider calmly, whether it be more incongruous to suppose God aiding and directing reasonable, but fallible beings, with his GRACE, than brutes with INSTINCTS."

DELANEY.

† "These doctrines serve no end of popular learning, they help no people to figure and preferment in the world, and are useless to scholastic, controversial writers."

WILLIAM LAW.

‡ But I must remember that, "the FEAR OF MAN bringeth a snare;—but who so putteth his trust in the Lord, shall be safe."

PROVERBS, xxix. 25.

ferent periods ; but, at all times, the defenders of evangelical truth are exposed to some mode or some degree of it. I know it well ; yet, " Woe is me," may I and every preacher say, " if I " preach not the gospel * ; " the true gospel ; such, at least, as, after the most careful search and long consideration, it appears to my imperfect understanding, and such as I believe it to be in my SOUL. I only desire the adversary, if any such should arise, to allow the possibility that he, as well as I, and the many great men who support me in my sentiments, may be mistaken ; and to ask his own heart, whether he has hitherto studied the subject as a truly humble † Christian, a fallen, depraved, ignorant, and weak creature ; or merely as a scholar, critic, philosopher, logician, metaphysician, controversialist, or politician, contending for the glory of victorious disputation, or the rewards of a profession established and encouraged by the state.

If any clergyman ‡ of the church of England should be disposed utterly to deny the doctrine of immediate

* 1 Cor. ix. 16.

† ANTONINUS taught, that the very first requisite to form a philosopher, was αποκαθαινει οντας, to throw away all CONCEIT of knowledge.

‡ The Rev. Thomas Edwards, Fellow of Clare Hall, Cambridge, after writing a learned and elaborate book against the doctrine of grace, is compelled, by the force of truth, at the conclusion of it, to make the following concessions :

" There are undoubtedly several passages which sufficiently shew, that the operations of the Holy Spirit are not to be entirely limited and confined to the extraordinary and miraculous gifts and endowments peculiar to the apostolic age ; but, on the contrary, that it will, in all succeeding ages, be communicated, in a peculiar manner, to all those who may stand in need of it, in order to the discharge of their duty.

" I can therefore by no means give into their opinion, who, with the witty French Jesuit, look upon these supernatural workings of immediate grace, divine energy, and supernatural impulse, I would beg leave humbly and affectionately to remind him of the question proposed to him when he was ordained a minister of Christ, and the answer he then made, with every circumstance of religious solemnity, receiving the sacrament upon it, and thus evidently resting all his hopes of God's blessing on his sincerity *.
" the

The

“ the Spirit upon the minds of man, as entirely visionary or chimerical ; or, as he expressed himself, a mere NESCIO QUID (je ne sçai quoi). A tempore Augustini, vix ulla vox frequentior fuit voce GRATIA, ubi sermo est de hominis ad sanio rem mentem reditu et vi, cui is reditus debetur. Eâ tamen voce quid significetur, cum ab iis quæritur, qui eâ utuntur, nihil responsi perspicui ferre licet. Hinc factum ut in Galliâ, Jesuita festivo ingenii, non insecutè dixit, ‘ Gratiam illam divinam, quæ tantum strepitum excitavit in scholis, et tam mirabiles effectus in hominum animis edit, gratiam illam adeo efficacem, et suavem simul, quæ de duritie cordis, illæsa arbitrii libertate, triumphat, nihil esse tandem, præter NESCIO QUID.’—From the time of St. Austin, scarcely any word has been in more frequent use than the word GRACE, when the subject of discourse is a man's return to a sounder mind, and the power to which that return is to be ascribed. But when the meaning of that word is asked of them who use it, they can give no clear and definitive answer. Hence it happened that in France a Jesuit of a facetious turn jocosely said, “ That this divine Grace which made such a noise in the schools, and produced such wonderful effects on the minds of men ; this Grace, at once so efficacious and delightful, which triumphs over the hardness of the human heart, without destroying free will, was after all nothing more than what the French express by the phrase, Je ne sçai quoi.” Clerici, Ars Crit. p. 2. f. 1. c. 8.

“ The general manner in which the Spirit operates upon men, we may, I humbly conceive, suppose to be, by raising such particular ideas, or making such particular impressions upon their minds, as may influence them,” &c.

* “ All sacerdotal power is derived from the Holy Ghost ; and they who do not acknowledge themselves under the Holy Ghost's influence, acknowledge that they have no sacerdotal power. Our Saviour himself took not the ministry upon him, till he had this consecration.”

We think too lowly of the priest's office in our age. Very great it is, under the energy of the Holy Ghost. It is MINISTERIAL to the

The question is, "Do you trust that you are inwardly moved by the Holy Ghost, to take upon you this office and ministry, to serve God, for the promoting of his glory, and the edifying of his people?" "I TRUST so," replies the person to be ordained*.

As the topic is rather invidious, and certainly concerns myself as well as any of them whom I have the honour to call my brethren in the profession, I will refer it to Bishop Burnet, to make remarks on the response to the interrogatory. "Certainly," says the truly able prelate, "the answer that is made to this, ought to be well considered; for if any one says, 'I trust so,' that yet knows nothing of any such motion, and can give no account of it, he lies to the HOLY GHOST, and makes his first approach to the altar with a lie in his mouth; and that not to men, but to God. Shall not God reckon with those who run without his mission, PRETENDING that they trust they have it, when perhaps they understand not the importance of it? nay, and perhaps some LAUGH at it, as an enthusiastical question, who yet will go through the office. They come to Christ for the LOAVES; they hope to live by the altar and the gospel, how little soever they serve at one, or preach the other;

the diffusion of divine grace. Is there any office so truly important and dignified?

"The office of the ministry is of the highest nature: it is a trust which no language can sufficiently express; and the unfaithful discharge of it is, of all conditions in life, the most dreadful."

WILLIAM LAW.

* "Howbeit," says the Bishop, exhorting the ministers, in the office of ordination, "ye cannot have a mind and will thereto yourselves; for that will and ABILITY is given of God alone; therefore you ought and have need to pray earnestly for His Holy Spirit."

"therefore

“ therefore they will say any thing that is necessary for qualifying them (to receive the loaves and fishes), whether true or false *.” The Bishop’s animadversion is severe; and every man’s own conscience must whisper to him, in his own case, whether it be just and true.

One thing, however, is certain, and sufficient for my purpose. It is plain that persons who enter on the ministry, thus declaring themselves to believe that they are under a supernatural motion or impulse, cannot consistently deny, or explain away, the main principle of my book, which is the reality of such a supernatural motion or impulse. They confess that, in their own persons, they believe they have experienced that divine energy of the Holy Ghost, which, I maintain, inwardly MOVES THE MIND TO BELIEVE IN CHRIST, AND INCLINES THE HEART TO ALL MORAL VIRTUE.

If the sublime and comfortable doctrine of immediate grace were generally preached, the churches would be better frequented, and infidelity rare †. The common people, unspoiled by vain philosophy, hunger and thirst for the spiritual food which

* The bishop further says, “ Every one that ventures to say he trusts he is inwardly moved by the Holy Ghost, (without certain dispositions, which the bishop describes,) is a sacrilegious profaner of the name of God and of his Holy Spirit. He breaks in upon the church, not to FEED, but to ROB it.”

Bishop BURNET’S Past. Care, p. 112.

† “ We must carry this yet further than the bare believing that these things (the doctrines of Christianity) are TRUE; such a faith devils have. We must make our people understand, that this faith purifies the heart, and works by love; and it only becomes a SAVING and justifying faith, when, upon our entering upon the practice of those rules that this religion prescribes, we FEEL A REAL VIRTUE derived into us, that makes us NEW CREATURES, and gives us such a VITAL PERCEPTION of the truth of the promises made us in it, that we receive these, as earnest of our inheritance; and so taste and see that God is gracious to us. This makes us LIVING STONES in the SPIRITUAL BUILDING.”

Bishop BURNET’S Charge.

comes down from Heaven. Ought not their shepherds to feed them with such as is convenient for them, and to lead them from broken cisterns and barren lands, to the green pasture, and streams of living water? Who shall judge what is most convenient for them? a few individuals, or the million, directed, in their choice, by the concurrent guidance of the church, the liturgy, and the scriptures? It has been justly suggested, by a wit of antiquity, that the GUESTS, and not the cooks, are to judge of the taste and salubrity of the viands prepared for the table. Now the guests invited to the spiritual feast, appear, by their numerous attendance, to prefer the food which comes from above, the truly evangelical doctrine of grace. However unskilfully dispensed, the places of worship, where it is, or appears to be, dispensed at all, are thronged with multitudes, while other places are almost deserted*. How are the churches crowded by young and poor persons, at confirmations; the whole of which office is founded, most

* "But what then," it may be asked, "is the theological system adopted by our PREACHER? Though this may be difficult to ascertain with any precision, I think I may venture to assert, from a pretty large observation, that its more considerable parts consist of poetical descants upon the works of nature, slight discussions of the ordinary topics of morality, and, with an eye to particular seasons, of DRY NARRATIVES and DEMONSTRATIONS of the nativity, death, resurrection, and ascension of JESUS, who, except in these annual commemorations, has, I find, but little place in the sermons of our CLERICAL ORATOR. At other times he is more disposed to introduce the names and authority of heathen sages; and especially of the divine SOCRATES, who may be styled the CONFUCIUS of the west, and almost a rival of Christ. Hence his theology wears a very dubious character, being neither physical nor moral, Pagan nor Christian. However it appears to have received the sanction of public opinion, and is the current doctrine of the PULPIT: only now and then it happens, that in the hands of an ingenious reformer, it is further purged from the Leaven of Christianity." See a CHINESE FRAGMENT, or an Enquiry into the present State of Religion in England, printed in 1786, p. 282.

evidently

evidently, on the doctrine of grace, and the Holy Spirit's actual interposition.

The following is the bishop's prayer, in the office of confirmation: "Almighty and everlasting God, who hast vouchsafed to regenerate these thy servants, by water and the Holy Ghost, and hast given unto them forgiveness of all their sins; strengthen them, we beseech thee, O Lord, with the Holy Ghost the Comforter, and daily increase in them thy manifold GIFTS OF GRACE, the spirit of wisdom and understanding; the spirit of counsel and ghostly strength; the spirit of KNOWLEDGE and true godliness; and fill them, O Lord, with the spirit of thy holy fear, now and for ever." The bishop then laying his hand upon every one severally, says, "Defend, O Lord, this thy child, with thy heavenly grace, that he may continue thine for ever; and daily increase in thy Holy Spirit more and more, until he come unto thy everlasting kingdom." He proceeds thus: "Almighty and everlasting God, who makest us both to will and do those things that be good and acceptable unto thy divine Majesty, let thy Holy Spirit ever be with them; and so lead them in the KNOWLEDGE and obedience of thy holy word, that in the end they may obtain everlasting life. Vouchsafe to direct, sanctify, and govern both our hearts and bodies," &c.

Can any bishop who reads * these words, or any parish priest who sends the young ones of his flock, to

* What shall we think were Bishop Hoadley's ideas while reading them? Dr. EDMUND LAW, late Bishop of Carlisle, is a strenuous opposer of the doctrine of the Spirit's evidence. See some very cold, jejune, and imbecile observations on the subject, in a work intitled, "Considerations on the Theory of Religion," pages 17, 18, &c. and in that dull book, with duller notes, "King's Origin of Evil."

to hear them, consistently deny the doctrine of divine energy, or immediate grace * ?

Exclusively of this sublime doctrine, the GOSPEL, considered merely as a book of morality, has not so great an advantage over the KORAN, as every Christian must wish and believe it to possess. Mahomet requires, in the KORAN, " the belief " of one God, trust in him, frequent prayer and " fasting, almsgiving even to STRANGERS, keeping " of covenants, justice in dealings, patience in " adversity; to honour father and mother, and " to maintain them if they are old and poor. He " forbids usury, bearing false witness, profane " swearing, and the murdering of infants, which " had formerly been common in Arabia." The MAHOMETAN also allows JESUS to be a prophet sent from God, and commissioned to be a great instructor, reformer, and SAVIOUR. I say, divest Christianity of the GIFT which our LORD gave to men after his ascension, and the infidel will place Christ far below Socrates, Plato, Epictetus, Seneca, and rank him with Mahomet, or even in a lower class; since there are many who deem the Koran a very fine composition, far superior to the narratives of Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John,* and to the epistles of Paul, the chief of the apostles.

" Evil." I am informed that this learned and respectable man has been considered as the founder of a sect of Free-thinkers at Cambridge, some of whom have written books on his principles, and occupied distinguished stations in the church; whereas their proper place was the mathematical chair, where they might, without mischief, and with much advantage, have lectured on algebra.

* Bishop Beveridge says, " A man may as soon read the letter " of the scripture without eyes, as understand the mysteries of the " gospel without GRACE."

Divest

Divest Christianity of the Spirit's energy, and you rob it of its appropriate, distinguishing, and exclusive excellence and glory. You place it among the modes of superstition which, at various times, have been encouraged by states, in order to facilitate the movements of the political engine, in almost every country on the face of the globe. You make it the invention of man; and, as the invention of man, it will often be despised, in comparison with the philosophy which prevailed in the elegant schools of Athens and Rome, and which clothed its fine morality in all the seducing embellishments of a polished diction. The writings of Plato and Cicero will be preferred to those of the evangelists and apostles, if the PEARL which enriches the compositions of the latter, above all that human ingenuity can contrive, be torn from its place. That PEARL is figuratively emblematic of the Holy Spirit's ineffable influence.

The ray of divinity, the anointing of the Spirit, shed a heavenly effulgence on the page of the written gospel, which all human lights but faintly emulate. These are merely moons or satellites. Christianity is the sun of the system. I AM THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD, says Christ himself. Let us remember, that it is the INSPIRATION that makes the oracle; not the priest or the shrine. 'Take away the spring from the time-keeper, and though the wheels are curiously contrived, and the gold in which it is cased, and the jewels with which it is adorned, may still be valuable, yet it will no longer be esteemed but as a costly toy, or looked at, by those who want information, with confidence. Thus the gospel will have no vital, converting effect, when considered only as an historical narrative, with moral precepts occasionally interspersed, terfered, but unaccompanied with the MINISTRATION OF THE HOLY SPIRIT *.

FOR

* The successful propagation of the gospel could not be effected by the causes assigned by Mr. Gibbon; but must have been accomplished by the Holy Ghost. Is it not reasonable to believe that it may now be propagated and continued by the same means as at first—the powerful agency of Heaven? Let us hear a sensible writer on the subject.

“ The sole adequate cause of the successful propagation of the gospel is, according to the scriptures, the HOLY GHOST. It will be well if his agency, in these polite and rational days, be thought to deserve a moment's attention. Yet it is evident, that there must be some cause for this wonderful phenomenon. I shall not disgust the rational world, by supposing the agency of any supernatural being in the affair, but that of the great Author of Nature. Any Spirit inimical to him could not, and any Spirit obedient to his authority would not, produce a character of such GOODNESS, but under his authority, and by a power derived from himself. Even miracles cannot change the heart, whatever effect they may have on the judgment; and the ruling providence of God, implying only an external government, does not influence the will, as facts abundantly testify. All that is rational and human is totally unequal to the task; nay, perhaps the most sensible of mankind, should they deign to honour these sheets with their inspection, can scarcely bear the idea of a real Christian with patience. There is an ENERGY more than human which produces this character: and it remains that this must be the INFLUENCE OF THE HOLY GHOST.

“ The reader who will allow himself seriously to weigh this subject, may see that nothing short of this could constitute ONE REAL CHRISTIAN, in this or any other age of the church. Let him consider, whether it is even possible for mere man to invent such doctrines; much less to propagate them with any success, in a world like this. A number of men, possessed of a sixth sense, of which we had not the least idea, would find but few brought over to their opinion that they were possessed of such a sensation. Their pretensions would be construed into pride or folly; but those whom the MOST HIGH should endow with the same sensation, would easily believe. The application is obvious.

“ Thus we have a simple and obvious proof of the truth of Christianity (the propagation of it by the influence of the Holy Ghost). I fear, indeed, it will weigh but little with those who love not the real Gospel. The generality will say, ‘ At this rate, the majority of those who call themselves Christians, DO NOT EVEN KNOW THEIR OWN RELIGION.’ It is devoutly to be wished that this were not the case; that even MANY THAT HAVE

“ WAIT—

For political and interested purposes, the Gospel may be talked of in churches and universities; it may be scholastically defended, and generally professed, and yet totally misunderstood and misrepresented. It will have no influence * on the hearts of men: no, not on the hearts of the very persons who thus talk of it, profess it, defend it; nor of those who read or listen to the most elaborate apologies, de-

“ WRITTEN ABLY IN DEFENCE OF CHRISTIANITY, HAD “ THEMSELVES KNOWN ITS NATURE. Much of the advantage “ which deism has gained had then been prevented: we should have “ had more of the EXPERIMENTAL PROOF: and that scripture
 “ had been better known, ‘ He that believeth in the Son of God, “ hath the witness in himself.’ (1 John, v. 10.) Sceptical doubts
 “ will vanish before stubborn facts. Were the gospel itself understood,
 “ little time need be spent on its EVIDENCES. One sight of the sun
 “ is sufficient to point out its glorious Author. In all things else, “ EXPERIENCE is allowed to be the best schoolmaster; in religion
 “ only it is called enthusiasm.” MILNER.

* “ Judas Iscariot knew Jesus Christ—all that he did—just in “ the same manner (though much better) as a mere HISTORICAL be“ liever of the Gospel; a mere learned theologist. All knowledge “ of Christ, but that which is by divine inspiration, or the new “ birth, is but as poor and profitless as the knowledge of Judas “ Iscariot.”

“ The empty, letter-learned knowledge, which the natural man “ can as easily have of the sacred scriptures and religious matters, as “ of any other books or human affairs, being taken for divine know- “ ledge, has spread such darkness and delusion all over Christendom,
 “ as may be reckoned no less than a general apostacy from the gospel “ state of divine illumination.”

“ The best ability of the natural man can go no farther than talk,
 “ and notions and opinions about scripture words and facts; on these,
 “ he may be a great critic, an acute logician, a powerful orator,
 “ and know every thing of the scripture, EXCEPT THE SPIRIT AND
 “ THE TRUTH.”

“ Humility, meekness, patience, faith, hope, contempt of the “ world, and heavenly affections (the very life of Jesus in the soul)
 “ are by few people less earnestly desired, or more hard to be prac“ tised, than by great wits, classical critics, linguists, historians, “ and orators in holy orders.” WILLIAM LAW.

fences,

fences, and demonstrations *. Christ must be formed in the soul, before the soul can recognize the truth and efficacy of Christianity.

Nearly two thousand years have elapsed since the written Gospel was promulged; and it has appeared to stand in need of defences and apologies to this very hour. Nor have defences or apologies been deficient in number, or in sagacity and erudition. Fabricius reckons up several hundred books in defence of the Christian religion †. Diligent as he was, he has omitted many; and since his time, there has been a very considerable addition to the number. Yet the cause is said still to labour; and appearances justify the assertion. Accordingly, we have lately seen ingenious theologists, and excellent writers, called forth, by the exigencies of the times, in our own country, almost two thousand years after the origin of Christianity, and after all the preceding labours of divines, to display its evidences, as if it were the production

* “ He who goes about to speak of the mystery of the Trinity, and does it by words and names of man’s invention, talking of essences and existences, hypostases and personalities, priority in co-equalities and unity in pluralities, may amuse himself, and build a tabernacle in his head, and TALK something, he knows not what; but the good man, that FEELS the POWER OF THE FATHER, and to whom the SON is become wisdom, sanctification, and redemption; in whose heart the LOVE of the SPIRIT OF GOD is shed abroad; this man, though he understands nothing of what is unintelligible, yet he alone truly understands the Christian doctrine of the TRINITY.” Bp. TAYLOR, on John, vii. 17.

Miserable and disgraceful have been the rancorous disputes on the TRINITY; a subject, one would think, which, if worldly sentiments did not interpose, might be discussed with perfect composure of temper. The enemy has triumphed, while Christians have been tearing each other in pieces on an opinion.

“ But rise; let us no more contend, nor blame

“ Each other, blam’d enough elsewhere; but strive,

“ In offices of love, how we may lighten

“ Each other’s burden, in our share of woe.” MILTON.

† See his Bibliotheca Græca.

of

of yesterday. Such a display is said to be more necessary than ever; and Europe has produced many excellent works of the kind. Such books furnish exercise for the schools. May they be efficacious, as they are learned and ingenious! May they carry conviction to the heart, produce a lively faith, and refute the gainsayers! If they should fail, their failure must not be attributed to any defect of abilities in their authors, but to the omission of the internal evidence of the Holy Spirit*. They are, almost without exception, above the reach, and disgusting to the taste, of the multitude; and let it be duly remembered, that to mere human reason and human learning, the infidel is ever ready to oppose weapons from the same armoury. His heart must be pierced with the two-edged sword of the Spirit, before he will surrender to Faith the citadel of his own reason†.

But

* "Our faith may not stand in the wisdom of man, but in the power of God." 1 Cor. ii. 5.

† "That the excellency of the power may be of God and not of us," 2 Cor. iv. 7.

† The celebrated pamphlet, entitled, CHRISTIANITY NOT FOUNDED ON ARGUMENT, was certainly nothing more than a mockery. Nevertheless, many a truth is told in jest; and ridentem dicere verum quid vetat?

I allow that CHRISTIANITY IS NOT FOUNDED ON ARGUMENT; and I make the concession willingly, because I know that it has a better foundation. Christianity is not built on the sand; but, like the house of the wise, on the rock—even the Rock of Ages. I will quote the words of the ironical adversary, and let them avail as much as they can.

"No man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost. Here is pointed out to us that great dictator and infallible guide we have been seeking for, and, indeed, the only character we can possibly think of, any way equal to such a province. It could be nothing less than an omniscience and omnipresence itself; nothing but this inexhaustible fountain of all truth, that could be sufficient to such a demand; and he it is, the promised oracle, who is to attend the charge of believers to the end of the world; to keep alive his divine light constantly in their hearts; not to teach them

"rudimenta

But however the works now alluded to may succeed in carrying conviction to the hearts of men,

“ rudiments of logic, but to irradiate their souls at once with a “ thorough conviction ; and perform more by one secret whisper, “ than a thousand clamorous harangues from the schools. From “ the satisfaction consequent to the mind from his performance of “ this great office, it is, that he is so eminently styled the COM-“ FORTER ; as his operations are in another place very strongly and “ significantly termed the POWER OF GOD UNTO SALVATION.
 “ HE THAT BELIEVETH IN THE SON OF GOD, HATH THE “ WITNESS IN HIMSELF. In this sense it is, that we are pro“ perly styled the TEMPLES OF THE HOLY GHOST ; the conse“ crated scenes of his constant residence, there ever personally pre“ sent, and dispensing his certain intelligences to the soul, which the “ Apostle calls the WITNESSING OF THE SPIRIT WITH OUR “ SPIRIT.

“ It were endless to recount all the innumerable passages, through“ out the whole scripture, that concur in ascertaining the same su“ pernatural and all-sufficient source and origin of our faith, in op“ position to all the feeble aids and uncertain advices that reason “ might possibly contribute to the purpose. For we may observe,
 “ that in mentioning the principle of faith, we are always informed,
 “ both what it is, and what it is not. BY GRACE YE ARE SAVED, “ THROUGH FAITH, AND THAT NOT OF YOURSELVES ; IT IS “ THE GIFT OF GOD. NO MAN CAN COME TO ME, (says “ CHRIST,) EXCEPT IT BE GIVEN HIM OF MY FATHER.

“ The motive which induces me to receive the mysterious truths
 “ of the Gospel, is the peculiar grant and munificence of Heaven, “ over and above the common privileges of our nature. It seems,
 “ by the particular negatives every where so industriously dispersed “ through all the expressions that treat of this subject, that it was “ apprehended that there might possibly happen, amongst the un“ wary, some mistake on the occasion ; and that therefore, as it “ was an article of so great concern to have a just notion of, the “ greatest imaginable care was taken, by the most precise and empha-“ tical terms that could be devised, to guard against any such fatal “ consequence.

“ But the strongest confirmation of all these positive and repeated “ revelations on the point, the plainest declaration and direction what “ KIND OF EVIDENCE Christians were always to trust to and rely “ on, for the information and assurance of their minds, we may “ find summed up, in brief, in their Master's last instructions at “ parting. The Spirit of Truth which proceedeth from THE FA-“ THER, HE SHALL TESTIFY OF ME. As we have both the “ same men, it is certain that different persons, in different ranks of life, with various degrees of natural sensibility and intellectual improvement, will be struck, respectively, with different arguments, and actuated by diverse modes of persuasion. A learned defence or proof of Christianity, which is extolled by some, shall appear to others dull, lifeless, and totally foreign to the purpose. What is slighted by the few, may convince the many. On reading the book of the world, as a comment on the books of the library, and turning over the pages of experience, as a criterion of written wisdom, I think I have observed that critical and historical evidence, in Christian theology, however it may edify the scholar, has little or no good effect on the multitude. By them it is seldom attended to at all; very imperfectly understood when attended to; and, when both attended to and understood, more frequently raises doubts and suspicions, than produces firm belief, and that HOLY FRAME of mind which regulates the conduct of life, and supplies a heartfelt satisfaction. The poor, who are the major part of human beings, in all ages and countries, and to whom our Saviour particularly addressed his preaching, seldom know that books of critical theology exist, and “ same person and commission elsewhere again specified. THE SPIRIT, WHOM I SHALL SEND, SHALL LEAD YOU INTO ALL TRUTH.

“ But, not to stand for ever transcribing particulars, I refer you once more to the GREAT ORIGINAL, which will, I think, readily save us, both all farther trouble in quotations and comments, and abundantly evince, in opposition to all the evasive constructions which may be imposed on particular passages, that HE (the SPIRIT) was in general, to INSPIRE CONVICTION as well as holiness; and to ILLUMINATE as well as SANCTIFY our hearts.”

would

would certainly never become Christians, or have a just idea of what is meant by Christianity, if they were not addressed in a manner more authoritative, and more divinely influential *.

POPULAR MODES of recommending Christianity ought to be adopted and encouraged, even by the profoundest thinkers and most philosophical divines. Their favourite mode might convince only one description of persons, and those not nume-

* "It is worth our observing, that when the apostle calls upon his brethren not to be carried about with strange doctrines, he offers this as a preservative: It is a good thing that the heart be ESTABLISHED with GRACE. Heb. xiii. 9. This will guard us from errors, and this will directly lead us to truth; for by the effectual influence of God's grace and good Spirit on our minds, we shall find in ourselves a peculiar conviction, which will prevail more than all demonstrations; will be more apodictical than all arguments and reasonings. I may call this a divine kind of logic, which thoroughly confutes and convinces us, which answers all our scruples and cavils, and wholly captivates our understandings; inasmuch, that we are fully persuaded of the truth and reality of what is delivered to us.

"This, which I am now speaking of, is the very depth of CHRISTIAN THEOLOGY. You are brought, by what I here propound unto you, into the most INWARD RECESSES OF DIVINITY. If you come to the true understanding of this, you are arrived at the greatest proficiency in the Christian religion. It cannot be so well described as it can be experienced. The attainment of this excellency, and the discovery, go together. There is no better way to apprehend it than to possess it. Religion is better felt and relished by practice, than it can be comprehended in the way of speculation; as the sweetness of honey is better known by the taste, than by the description of it.

"The real and experienced Christian differs from the speculative one, as the merchant does from the chemist. The former hath no skill in furnaces, and cannot talk of the nature of gold, or the ordering of it, according to art, yet he is rich, and hath gold enough. The latter hath rare notions of gold, and can discourse with great skill and quaintness about the managing of it; but yet the man is poor, and wants what he talks of. In like manner a true practical Christian may be rich in grace, though he cannot learnedly discourse of it; and a speculative Christian may be truly poor, though he can talk of the spiritual riches.—Aristotle wrote of the world, but his scholar conquered it."

Dr. JOHN EDWARDS.

rous,

rous, in the infinite variety of which the mass of mankind is composed. So long as Christian faith, Christian practice, and human happiness are more and more promoted, however lowly the men, and however mean the books that promote them, let the benevolent rejoice. Abstruse scholars, mathematicians, metaphysicians, and logicians, have often little relish for Christianity, till it is formed into a system, methodical, subtle, and erudite. Their religion must too often be such only as furnishes matter for ingenious disquisition. They are apt, in the pride of scientific improvement, to despise the simplicity of the Gospel. A religion, however, merely INTELLECTUAL, if there be any which may be so denominated, is essentially different from, and inferior to, what I have in this book inculcated, under the idea of cordial religion *. The one qualifies for degrees in an university school; the other is calculated to influence the conduct of all men, in the walks of common life; in the court, in the city, in the camp, and in the market-place. High, low, rich, and poor, learned and unlearned, meet together in the school of Christ, and are there equally favoured with grace, and instructed in the knowledge which leadeth to salvation. Ill would it fare with mankind, if they must be linguists and historians, before they can be duly informed of the nature of that religion, which was intended for the happiness of all; and on the neglect and ignorance of which, they are obnoxious to divine displeasure.

* "With the HEART man believeth unto righteousness."

Rom. x. 10.

"If thou believest with all thine heart." Acts, viii. 37.

Systematical or intellectual religion may employ the pen of a ready writer, or the tongue of a voluble disputant in the academical or ecclesiastical chair; but cordial religion, effectually, though silently; certainly, though unostentatiously; sweetens, softens, and spiritualizes, the human disposition. It may not gratify the pride or serve the worldly interest of individuals, but it elevates and refines the general nature of MAN.

How is this religion to be learned *? Not from systems, not from critics or metaphysicians, not from heathen historians and moralists, but by the TEACHING of GOD, or the divine energy of gospel grace. Such is the principle of what I have ventured to term Christian Philosophy †, in contradistinction

* Not by the letter, but by the Spirit, was MARY MAGDALEN learned. And how are your family, your mother and sister, your servants, your poor neighbour, made Christians—by Dr. Clarke? by academical professors? or by the gospel accompanied with immediate grace?

“But whom say ye that I am? Simon Peter answered and said, “Thou art Christ, the Son of the living God. And Jesus answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou, Simon Bar Jona; MY FATHER WHICH IS IN HEAVEN HATH REVEALED IT UNTO THEE.” MATT. xvi. 15, &c.

Our Saviour does not say that Peter had done well to form that conclusion, from reasoning on what he saw and heard; or deriving the conviction from any human means; but he says, “FLESH AND BLOOD hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in Heaven.”

† That experience is the best guide to Christian knowledge, is Dr. South's opinion:

“The truths of Christ crucified are the CHRISTIAN'S PHILOSOPHY; and a good life is the Christian's logic; that great instrumental, inductive art, that must guide the mind into the former; and where a long course of piety, and close communion with God, has purged the heart, and rectified the will, and made all things ready for the reception of God's Spirit, knowledge will break in upon such a soul, like the sun shining in his full might, with such a victorious ray, that nothing shall be able to resist it.
“It is experience that must give knowledge in the Christian profession, as well as all others; and the knowledge drawn from experience distinction to the philosophy of heathenism, and modern infidelity. It is CLEAR, amidst some *obscurity, from the whole tenor of the gospel and epistles, that since our Lord's ascension, the beneficial purposes of Christianity are accomplished by the continual agency and never-failing superintendence of the Holy Spirit. I would by no means proceed so far as a writer some hundred years ago, who, observing the great and constant power attributed, by the written gospel, to the Holy Ghost, published a book, which he intitled, EVANGELIUM SPIRITUS SANCTI, or, the Gospel of the Holy Ghost; but, at the same time, it appears to me evident, from the declarations of Jesus Christ, that the gospel is now chiefly efficacious, as it has been ever since the ascension, by the operation of the Holy Ghost; the wakeful, tutelary guardian of every human creature. He may be resisted; his holy fire may be quenched; his temple

"perience is quite of another kind from that which flows from speculation and discourse. It is not the opinion, but the path of the just, that, the wisest of men tells us, shines more and more unto a perfect day. The obedient, and the men of practice, are those sons of light, that still outgrow all their doubts and ignorances; that still ride upon these clouds, and triumph over their present imperfections; till persuasion pass into knowledge, and knowledge advance into assurance; and all come, at length, to be completed in the beatific vision, and a full fruition of those joys, which God has in reserve for them whom, by his grace, he shall prepare for glory."

Dr. SOUTH.

Dr. South, a man of wit and most vigorous intellect, was particularly active in decrying the doctrine of immediate grace, because the COURT discountenanced those who maintained it: and therefore what he has here said must be allowed to be extorted from him, by the force of truth opposing royal influence and political religion, which varies as the wind blows.

* "The obscurity and difficulty of the scriptures serves," says Bishop Wilson, "to subdue the pride of man; to convince us, that to understand them, we have need of a light superior to reason, and that we must apply to God for help."

P

may

may be polluted; and he may, in consequence, depart in displeasure. Happy would it be, if appearances did not justify the apprehension*, that he is actually resisted, his holy fire quenched, his temple polluted, and both his displeasure and departure little regarded. It is the scope of Christian Philosophy to prevent this dreadful calamity.

To inquire how† the Spirit operates, is fruitless, if not presumptuous. It is enough for man to know, that it does operate; that, unless the words of scripture are violently tortured out of their meaning, out of that plain sense which every reader of competent judgment and of integrity, unwarped by prejudice, must allow them to bear, the Spirit of God is at this moment effecting, in the bosoms of all who are duly prepared for its energy, the grand purpose of our Saviour's incarnation. Great indeed is the mystery: but equally mysterious are the processes of nature‡. All around us is mystery. Our very existence, our nutrition, the motion of a muscle in our bodies, is a wonderful arcanum, too difficult to be accounted for by reason. Yet, I believe, and know, that I live, and move, and have my being, though I cannot explain the union of soul and body, the mode of alimentary supply, or the cause of muscular motion. So also the spiritual life and motion

* The prevalence of war and the general approbation it meets with, is an indubitable proof that the Spirit of Christ is resisted and quenched by poor mortals, who, unappalled by the jaws of death opened to receive themselves, are continually pointing their weapons against unoffending millions, in unjust and unnecessary wars, begun and continued by the pride and folly of narrow-minded, sensual, corrupt, proud, avaricious, and unbelieving.

† "Vocula illa quomodo," Luther used to say, "est detestabilis."—That little word How is detestable.

‡ "Is the doctrine of grace more stupendous than the velocity of motion given to light?" Bp. WARRINGTON.

tion are inexplicable. But this is certain: he who believes the scriptures, must believe its reality. And he who is once truly and experimentally * convinced of the Spirit's operation, will want no other EVIDENCE; and he who tastes the fruits of the Spirit, will desire no other display of the EXCELLENCE of Christianity. Thus will the purpose of my book be accomplished. The EVIDENCE and EXCELLENCE of Christianity will be FELT † and acknowledged by every man, who becomes a convert to the doctrine of grace. He will acquire a

* “ Η ΤΗΣ ΠΕΙΡΑΣ ἀκριβεία παύσκει τὴν τῶν λόγων ἀνάγκην.”—The accurate and certain knowledge of actual experience, surpasses all that can be taught by the persuasive powers of oratory or composition. DIOD. SIC. Hist. lib. i.

PRAYER is the means of producing this EXPERIENCE in religion.

“ If mankind are corrupted and depraved in their moral character, and so are unfit for that state which Christ is gone to prepare for his disciples; and if the assistance of GOD'S SPIRIT be necessary to renew their nature, in the degree requisite to their being qualified for that state, all which is implied in the express, though figurative declaration, ‘ Except a man be BORN of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God:’ supposing this, is it possible any serious person can think it a slight matter, whether or no he makes use of the means, expressly commanded by God, for obtaining this DIVINE ASSISTANCE; especially since the whole analogy of nature shews that we are not to expect any benefits, without making use of the appointed means for obtaining or enjoying them? Now REASON shews us nothing of the particular immediate means of obtaining spiritual benefits. This, therefore, we must learn from REVELATION.”—And Revelation says, Ask, and it shall be given. BUTLER'S Annals. Part 2. c. 1.

† “ We not only believe it, but we FEEL it too; we feel the comfortable influences, the sacred emanations of the Holy Spirit upon us; more particularly at those offices of DEVOTION, wherein HE descends upon us also, as he did once upon our blessed Saviour, like a dove, and sheds his grace upon us, in some measure, with those excellencies which become the sons of God.

“ Or rather, he descends upon us, as he did once before, upon the face of the waters, when he brought beauty and order upon that which before was nothing but deformity and confusion.”

Bp. HICKMAN.

SPIRITUAL UNDERSTANDING *; his rational faculty, as to spiritual matters, will be sublimed and refined in such a manner, as to supersede the necessity of those voluminous, far-fetched, and elaborate proofs and defences of Christianity which have been enumerated, in a long catalogue, by Fabricius; and which, one after another, like abortive productions, have dropped into the gulph of oblivion, and left Christianity just where they found it. Indeed, as defences of this kind have increased, Christians appear to have decreased. The cavils introduced for refutation have lived, and the refutations died and been forgotten.

But doctrines which cannot be refuted by scripture, are sometimes exploded by the illiberal means of stigmatizing them with an offensive or unpopular NAME. This practice has always been highly detrimental to the diffusion of genuine Christianity. It causes opinions to be condemned in the gross. It induces the mind of the careless, contemptuously to reject the mass, without selecting the wheat from the chaff, and, indeed, without the trouble of examination. There is a vicissitude or fashion in religious doctrines, as well as in the modes of dress and external behaviour. Such a book, says the leader of the day, is Arminian, or Calvinistical, or METHODISTICAL †, and it must be cried down by

* Col. i. 9. "We pray for you that ye may be filled with the knowledge of his will, in all wisdom and spiritual understanding."—Again, "Consider what I say, and the Lord give thee UNDERSTANDING in all things." 2 TIM. ii. 7.

† BISHOP HURD is as far removed from a methodist as possible. He is a divine, a philosopher, a scholar of the first rank; yet hear him (and let his words have weight) on the evidence of the Spirit of God on the heart of man.

"To the SPIRIT, enlightening our understandings, purifying our wills, and confirming our faith, we must impute ALL that is good " in by every pamphleteer or controversialist, who is aspiring at favour and preferment. But away with names, and the petty distinctions of religious party. Are you a Christian, or wish to be one, in deed, not in word only; for the sake of spiritual, not temporal purposes? Then drop your

“ in us, ALL that proficiency in TRUE holiness, which qualifies us for the enjoyment of Heaven; and through this discipline it is, that they who sow to the Spirit, are, in the end, enabled of the Spirit to reap LIFE EVERLASTING.”

“ All the revelations of God's will, even to our Lord himself as the man Christ Jesus, and all the secret illuminations of the faithful, in all times, are to be regarded as so many emanations from the Spirit of God, the ENLIGHTENER: all the gradual improvements of our virtue, all the graces which first descend upon our hearts, and then manifest themselves in every good word and work, are the production of the same Spirit, in his office of SANCTIFIER: and lastly, all the firmness and resolution we possess, under every trial in the world, all the foretaste we have of future favour and acceptance, all our JOY and PEACE in BELIEVING, are the signs and proofs of the COMFORTER speaking to us, and, according to our Saviour's PROMISE, ABIDING IN US.”

“ If a ray of light break in upon us; if a new degree of knowledge be imparted to us; if we see the TRUTH OF THE GOSPEL more clearly, in any respect, than before we had done; WE CANNOT MISTAKE in ascribing this additional information, or CONVICTION, to the ILLUMINATING SPIRIT WITHIN US.”

“ If we perceive our DEVOTIONS to be quickened, our hopes enlivened, our FAITH FORTIFIED, we shall not mistake (having the express promise of our Lord and Master) in ascribing these consolations of peace and joy to the COMFORTER; we may regard them as the EARNEST AND PLEDGE OF THE SPIRIT IN OUR HEARTS. (Eph. i. 14.)

“ I know,” continues he, “ that this will appear strange to natural reason. But so the scripture has prepared us to expect they would do. For the natural man (says the apostle) receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him. (1 Cor. ii. 14.) And to the same purpose, our MASTER himself, speaking of the SPIRIT OF TRUTH;—“ whom (says he) the WORLD cannot receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him; but ye, (addressing himself to his disciples, that is, to men who walk by faith, and not by sight,) ye know him; for he dwelleth in you, and shall be in you.”

Bp. HURD, Sermon 18. vol. ii.

prejudices, and seek the SPIRIT OF CHRISTIANITY; not in systems, but in the written gospel, assisted by prayer, and the pious illustrations of men sincere and good, however they may have been reviled or neglected, through prejudice, political artifice, or mistaken zeal. When you have thus found the truth, shew its influence by your charity. Be united to all Christians, as well as to Christ; and beware of making distinctions, by nicknames, and thus exciting envy, wrath, malice, which are of a nature opposite to the fruits of the Spirit, love, joy, and peace. Good men should join in a firm phalanx, that the evil may not triumph on their divisions. Let all who are united under the banners of Christ, hail one another as brother Christians, though they may differ on the subject of church discipline, rites, ceremonies, or even non-essential doctrine *.

“ If

* “ Setting aside many circumstances, in which men may safely
 “ err, there are but few truths of scripture of an essential nature;
 “ or, to speak more properly, there is but ONE, concerning which “ all believers (I mean those who deserve the name) are firmly “ agreed. This truth is the testimony of the word of God concern“ ing Jesus Christ, that he came into the world to save sinners fully, “ freely, and eternally. So little room then, in reality, does the “ scripture give for the diversity of opinions, that it calls for perfect “ unity of sentiment; the diversity itself being owing to the cor“ ruption and blindness of human nature in the worst, as well as “ the remains of that corruption and blindness in the best. The “ evidence of this truth, whence arises so full an agreement among be“ lievers, and such complete satisfaction in their own minds, is far “ greater than what can arise from any argumentation, in which “ mankind are apt to deceive both themselves and others. It is the “ evidence of INTERNAL EXPERIENCE. I feel myself lost and “ miserable. I experience an healthful change in my whole “ moral system: so that, upon the whole, Christianity is the true “ cure of scepticism; and to the seriously disposed, who submit to “ the teaching of the Spirit, it GIVES THE HIGHEST INTERNAL “ EVIDENCE OF ITS OWN TRUTH. A man finds himself natu“ rally averse to all good, ignorant of God, and without either love “ or gratitude towards him, selfish and hard-hearted with respect to “ his

“ If there be any consolation in Christ, if any “ comfort in love, if any fellowship of the Spirit, if “ any bowels and mercies, fulfil ye my joy, that “ ye be like-minded, having the same love, being
 “ of one accord, and of one mind *.”

Let us consider how the hard-hearted, unconverted, depraved, and worthless part of mankind exult, while Christians, agreeing in essentials, quarrel and revile each other, not on the substance of religion, but on the mere shades of difference in opinion in matters of indifference. Let not the Philistines triumph. Let the olive-bearing army of peace-makers be combined under the banners of benevolence. Theirs is an unbloody† crusade;

“ his fellow-creatures. By putting his trust in Christ, he has attained peace of conscience, love, and new views of the glory of “ God. He has experienced a real change in his affections and tempers. Surely he must be allowed to be a competent judge of what “ he has felt; he may preach too, by his life, the truth and the “ power of the gospel to others; and as he will find his evidences “ increase more and more, he may be more and more happy, from “ the consciousness of God within him now, (Col. i. 27. 2 Cor.
 “ xiii. 5.) and the prospect of bliss hereafter.

“ If it be asked, where are such persons to be found? it is confessed their number is but rare. We may thank, for this, the “ CONTEMPT OF THE OPERATIONS OF THE HOLY GHOST,
 “ which prevails in our days. A serious desire of knowing the real “ truth, and a spirit of submission to this divine teaching, are “ things which the truth requires of all who seek it: if you refuse “ this, you unreasonably refuse to Christianity her own mode and “ order of things; you strip her of her arms, and then complain of “ her feebleness and impotency. But if you submit to be the “ scholar of Jesus indeed, you will find, by experience, whether he “ will not give you to know the truth, and whether the truth will “ not make you free.”

MILNER.

* Phil. ii. 1, 2.

† “ The pope would have done well to have thrown away his “ keys, (as they say one of them once did,) before he took the “ sword into his hands.”

P †

theirs

theirs is the contest of love. The victories in their warfare are over sin, misery, and death; and their crown, immortality. Let them march on to the soft harmony of Hosannas and Hallelujahs, uninterrupted by the discordant din of angry contention. Are you a sincere believer? a lover of God and man? I salute you from my heart as my brother in Christ, whether, in consequence of your birth and education, you formed the creed you utter, at Rome, at Geneva, or in your closet at home. The Holy Ghost is the centre of our union; and all who are joined to him, must be associated in love.

Under the illustrious champions of Christianity, who flourished, in England, during the last * century, great were the triumphs of GRACE OVER human obduracy. The word of God was mighty, and cast down imaginations †. The sword of the Spirit, a figurative sword, the only one approved by Christianity, wielded by men who, like these, fought the good fight of faith, has been irresistible. But many, since their time, have let it rust in its scabbard, and used, as a substitute for it, the wooden baton of heathen ethics and modern philosophy, in a kind of mock fight, beating the air, to the amusement of the indifferent or unbelieving spectator. The men of the world, who laugh at religion, and the pretended philosophers who reason against it, observing that the sword of

* "But now," says Bp. Warburton, "the profession of the Christian faith is attended with ease and honour; and the conviction, " which the weight of human testimony, and the conclusions of " HUMAN REASON, afford of its truth, are abundantly sufficient to " support us in our religious perseverance." Why then the general APOSTASY in France and partial one in Great Britain?

† 2 Cor. ix. v. διαλογισμους, which we render imaginations, certainly signifies REASONINGS.

the

the Spirit was no longer used, came forth with the renewed and increased audacity of those who love to display their prowess, when there is but a feeble opposition. They sang the song of victory, and ventured to suggest that Christianity, conscious of the badness of her cause, had surrendered in fact, though she still kept up the appearance of defence, for the sake of decency, LUCRE, and political deception. Infidelity plumed herself on her fancied conquest, and has long been endeavouring to sway her sceptre over the most polished countries of Christendom. In France, at last, she flatters herself she has gained a complete victory, and silenced her opponent for ever.

Let us mark and deplore the consequence to morals and society. Extreme selfishness, pride, vanity, envy, malice, hardness of heart, fraud, cunning, and the false varnish of external decorum, hiding internal deformity, have remarkably prevailed in recent times, in the most polished regions, rendering man, as an individual, wretched and contemptible, and society comfortless and insecure. The human race has degenerated, in proportion as faith has diminished. The true spirit of Christianity, which can alone dignify human nature, and soften and liberalize the obdurate, contracted, selfish bosom of the mere natural *animal, man, has not been sufficiently dif-

* I hope the present time is not that of which the apostle speaks:

“The time will come, when they will not endure sound doctrine.”

2 TIM. iv. 3.

Men who preach against divine grace, may be said to be those whom Christ addresses in these words:

“Ye shut up the kingdom of Heaven against men; for ye neither go in yourselves, neither suffer ye them that are entering to go in.”

MATT. xxiii. 13.

But while God's eternal truth is its foundation, and God's Holy Spirit its guard, neither violence nor treachery can subvert the kingdom of Heaven.

fused, since it has been fashionable to extol natural religion, by depreciating grace ; and the result has been, a deplorable profligacy both in principle and practice.

How devoutly then is it to be wished, that this true spirit may revive ; that the divine influence of the GENUINE GOSPEL * may again prevail, and melt the heart of steel, and bow the stubborn knees of the men of the world, and the wise men whom the world admires ? Behold them pursuing their own petty, selfish, sordid purposes, regardless of all others, but as they serve their own interest or pleasure ; neither loving God nor man, and depraved to a nature almost diabolical, by habits of fashionable voluptuousness, selfishness, and CRUELTY, authorized by the most illustrious examples in HIGH life. Behold this diabolical character transforming itself to an angel of light, by studied embellishments and polished manners, in which truth, honour, and benevolence are assumed as a cloak to cover the basest treachery, the vilest arts of dissimulation. Behold this character recommended, with all the charms of language, by one of the first NOBLEMEN, wits, and writers of the times, as the mark of the most solid wisdom ; behold it, in consequence of recommendation so powerful, spreading among the youth of the nation, and diffusing a polished, splendid misery, like the shining appearance which is seen on masses of corruption and putrescence. “ Ye are the salt of the earth,” says our Saviour ; evidently meaning the salt that is to preserve the world from a corrupt state, by becoming the means of grace to those who hear you preach and teach the true doctrine. How is he then the friend of man, or

* ἡ ἀληθὴς

of

of his country, who obstructs the prevalence of such doctrine? Yet men *, apparently good and learned, have united with the unprincipled, in placing every obstacle in the way of its diffusion among the people.

The grace of God is favourable to the tranquillity and security of the state; to the community, as well as to individuals, by teaching virtue of the most beneficial kind under the strongest sanction. "The grace of God," says the apostle, "teaches us to deny all ungodliness and worldly lusts, and to live soberly, righteously, and godly in the WORLD." Yet against the prevalence of this grace of God, many pens and tongues have been employed during the last fourscore years; the pen and tongues, not of profligate infidels only, but of divines, teaching, for Christianity, a moral system of philosophy, well known † long before

* Bishops Hoadley, Warburton, Edmund Law, and their imitators, some of whom are now living, besides the Socinian or Unitarian sect, oppose this doctrine. "Ask why even the most worthy and pious amongst the clergy of the established church are afraid to assert the sufficiency of the divine light, the necessity of seeking only to the guidance and inspiration of the Holy Spirit; it is because the QUAKERS who have broken off from the established church have made this doctrine their CORNER STONE."

† Yet the heathens themselves, mere moralists as they are often considered, had an idea of the divine energy. Remarkable are the words of Maximus Tyrius.

"Do you wonder that God was present with Socrates, friendly, and prophetic of futurity—AN INMATE OF HIS MIND?—A man, he was, pure in his body, good in his soul, exact in the conduct of his life, masterly in thinking, eloquent in speaking, pious towards God, and holy towards men."

The doctrine of divine assistance, or of the immediate operation of the heavenly Spirit on the mind of man, is so far from unreasonable, that it was maintained by some of the greatest masters of reason, before the appearance of Christianity.

"The vestiges of this sublime truth are to be traced in all nations, ages, and religions, and," says a celebrated author, "they are emanations before the nativity of Christ ; and thus rendering, as far as their efforts could prevail, his gospel a superfluous, and even ugly excrescence upon it.

There

“ emanations of the antediluvian tradition, more or less disguised and adulterated.”

The heathens did not affirm that the knowledge they possessed of theology was derived to them from reason ; for Plato expressly says it is θεῶν τις ἀνθρώποις δότης, the gift of Gods to men,—the effect of divine communication. They deemed it supernatural, that reason should discover the will of God ; a gift above nature, (ὑπὲρ φύσιν εἶναι τὴν φύσιν), and overcoming nature in its present state of imbecility. The dead may as easily arise and walk, as the mind of man, fallen, as it is, into a state of spiritual death, raise itself to God and a divine life. Nothing can enable man to do those things which are above his natural powers, but supernatural aid, and that must come from the influence of the Deity.

It is, however, worth while to mark the DISCORDANT and inconsistent opinions of celebrated heathens on the subject of divine assistance.

“ Bonus vir sine Deo nemo est.”—No man is a good man without the assistance of God.

SENECA, Epist. 41.

“ Miraris hominem ad Deos ire ? Deus ad homines, imo (quod prius est) in homines venit : nulla sine Deo mens bona est. Ascendentes manum porrigunt.”—Do you wonder that man goes to God ? Why, God comes to man ; nay, (which is nearer still,) enters into him. No man has a good mind without God. When men endeavour to climb up to Heaven, the gods extend a hand to help them thither.

Epist. 73.

“ Deus in humano corpore hospitans.”—God dwelling in the human body.

Epist. 31.

Yet this same philosopher says, in another place, “ Est aliquid quo sapiens antecedit Deum. Ille naturæ beneficio, non suo, sapiens est. In one respect a philosopher excels God. God is obliged to nature for his wisdom, and cannot help being so. The philosopher thanks himself only.”

Epist. 53.

“ Atque hoc quidem omnes mortales sic habent, externas commoditates, vineta, segetes, olivæta, ubertatem frugum et fructuum, omnem denique commoditatem, prosperitatemque vitæ, a Diis se habere ; virtutem autem nemo unquam acceptam Deo retulit. Nimirum recte. Propter virtutem enim jure laudamur, et in virtute recte gloriamur. Quod non contingeret, si id donum a Deo, non a nobis haberemus. At vero aut honoribus aucti, aut re familiari, aut si aliud quippiam nostri sumus fortuiti boni, depulimus mali, cum Diis gratias agimus, tum nihil nostræ laudi assumptum arbitramur. Num quis, quod bonus vir esset, gratias Diis egit unquam ? at quid dives, quid honoratus,

“ quid

- There is a kind of wisdom, we are told on the best authority, "which descendeth not from above, but is EARTHLY, SENSUAL, DEVILISH *." No

"quod incolumis. Ad rem autem ut redeam, iudicium hoc omnium mortalium est, fortunam a Deo petendam, a seipso sumendam esse sapientiam."—All mankind hold the opinion, that external advantages, such as vineyards, corn fields, olive gardens, abundance of all the various fruits of the earth, lastly every thing that tends to the accommodation and prosperity of life, is derived from the Gods; but no man ever acknowledged himself indebted to God for his VIRTUE. Undoubtedly this judgment is right and reasonable. For we are properly commended for our virtue, and we justly glory in our virtue; which could not be, if it were a GIFT OF GOD, and not a possession derived entirely from ourselves. But different is the case when we receive any accession of honour and fortune, or if we get any unlooked-for advantage or avoid any imminent evil; for then, as we thank God for it, so we assume no merit or praise to ourselves on the occasion.

Did any man ever return thanks to the Gods that he was a good man? No; he returns thanks to the Gods because he is a rich man, because he has received some public honour, or because he enjoys a state of safety.

To return then to the point I am maintaining. It is the unanimous opinion of mankind, that success or good fortune in the world is to be sought of God, but that wisdom is to be derived from one's self entirely.

CICERO, de Nat. Deor. lib. 3. c. 36.

"Multos et nostra civitas et Græcia tulit singulares viros quorum neminem, NISI JUVANTE DEO, talem fuisse credendum est."—Our country (Rome) as well as Greece has produced many extraordinary men, not one of whom, I believe, would ever have been such, but by the assistance of God.

CIC. de Nat. Deor. lib. 2.

"Nemo igitur vir magnus sine aliquo afflatu divino usquam fuit."—No man was ever a great man without something of divine inspiration.

CIC.

"Hic est quisquam gentis ullius qui ducem naturam natûs ad virtutem pervenire potest."—Is there any man of any country in the world who by the mere guidance of Nature could attain to virtue?

CIC. Leg.

Both Cicero's and Seneca's sentiments on this subject are contradictory.

"Ἀπολαί εὐταγμένης Θεοῦ καὶ ἐκκλησιαστικῆς."—Men stand in need of God as an assistant and co-operator.

MAX. TYR. Diff. 22.

Simplicius, Maximus Tyrius, Xenophon, and Plato maintain, in the most express terms, the doctrine of divine influence.

* James, iii. 15.

wonder

wonder that men, who are taught, by their instructors, to pursue this wisdom, and, in effect, to reject the gospel at the very moment they are solemnly professing it, should become (like the wisdom which they cultivate, and which the apostle so strongly reprobates) earthly, sensual, DEVILISH. Much of the profligacy of manners in the present century is to be attributed to the desertion of the religion of our forefathers, and the teaching of a Christianity which has not the SAVOUR OF LIFE, and was unknown in England at the reformation.

“Earthly, sensual, devilish,” are the epithets which the apostle uses: now let us turn from the written book to the living world. Can any impartial observer deny, without affected candour, that there are many, whose conduct deserves these epithets? and can he deny, that they are chiefly among persons who seem to live without God in the world, and to be unbelievers in Revelation, though perhaps conformists to the church? Such persons seem to delight in evil; and, like the being from whom the last of these epithets is taken, to go about, seeking whom they may devour*. No man can be much conversant in any business in the world, especially when there is competition, without meeting with men who hesitate at no falsehood or baseness, and with whom it is never safe to have either conversation or transaction. Plausibly pretending to courteousness, to friend-

* Read, in the following description from scripture, how men ONCE degenerated, when estranged from God.

“So that there reigned in all men, without exception, blood, manslaughter, theft, and dissimulation; corruption, unfaithfulness, tumults, perjury, disquieting of good men, forgetfulness of good turns, defiling of souls, changing of kind, disorder in marriages, adultery, and shameless uncleanness.”

Wisdom, c. xiv. 23—29.

ship,

ship, to every thing just, right, and amiable, they lie in wait to deceive and to injure. They will do wanton mischief, for its own sake. They will not only demolish the fair fabric of another's happiness, but laugh over the ruins which they have made.

How beneficial would it be for such persons, and for society, if their hearts were renewed by regenerating grace; if they could be persuaded to believe that there really is something more desirable than MAMMON; something that contributes more to happiness, and the pleasurable enjoyment of life, than show, equipage, living in the eyes of others, and the indulgence of an unfeeling, self-idolizing vanity, at the expence of truth, justice, mercy, and every thing that gives solid satisfaction and real dignity. The grace of God would even ADORN them, make them more estimable and honourable, than the longest series of unmeaning titles, the most brilliant gems in a coronet, the most magnificent houses and parks, and most gaily-painted vehicles. It would do more; it would liberalize and soften their hearts, and make them MEN, such as the Creator intended them to be, feelingly alive to the charms of goodness, and to the touch of sympathy. The *film would be removed from their eyes; and while they consulted the peace and happiness of others, they would see the things that belong unto their own. The horizon of their mental vision, now all sombrous and cloudy, would be beautifully serene. The stream

* "If the world have got possession, talk no more of your questions, shut your bibles, read no more of the word of God to them: worldly affections hinder true understanding of religion."

BP. TAYLOR.

"Demas," says St. Paul, "hath forsaken me, having loved this present world."

of

of their lives, now a desolating torrent, abruptly dashing and foaming over its banks, would flow in its proper channel, smooth and clear, blest and blessing in its course.

Surely every thinking and good-natured mortal, who observes what a despicable and detestable, or rather pitiable object, a man becomes, however elevated his rank and affluent his fortune, when his heart is hardened, and he feels no sentiment of love to God, or kindness to his fellow-creatures, must wish to promote, and gladly co-operate with others in promoting, the prevalence of the true Spirit of Christianity*. This alone, operating

* The true Spirit of Christianity can alone preserve the church and sincere religion in society.

"I must profess, that I believe the DEGENERACY from the truth and power of the Christian religion, the ignorance of the principal doctrines of the Gospel, and that scorn which is cast in these, and the like expressions, on the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, by such as not only profess themselves to be ministers, but of a higher degree than ordinary, will be sadly ominous to the whole state of the reformed church amongst us, if not timely repressed and corrected."

Dr. OWEN.

The scriptures themselves attribute the corruption of religion, and even the total loss of DIVINE KNOWLEDGE, to the reasonings of men upon it: when they regard the outward, and neglect or despise the inward testimony.

There is no truth more clearly asserted in scripture, than that the things of God are not known but by the SPIRIT OF GOD.

"The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are SPIRITUALLY discerned." I COR. ii. 14.

"He that lacketh these things," (the graces mentioned in a preceding verse, particularly the partaking of the divine nature,) "is BLIND, and cannot see afar off." 2 PET. i. 9.

Men wanting these graces, and this participation of the divine nature, we are expressly told, grew vain in their imaginations; professing themselves wise, they became fools; worshipping the creature (and among the created things is to be numbered the faculty of reasoning) more than the Creator. They spoiled the religion of Christ, through philosophy and vain deceit, after the traditions of men, and turned the truth of God into a lie. This was in consequence of following the rudiments of the world, κατὰ τὰς ἐνθυμίας, according to operating by grace, can restore the depraved, fallen, wretched creature, become, by his perverseness, earthly, sensual, devilish, to his proper rank, as a rational, immortal being, and to the unspeakable happiness for which he was intended by divine benevolence.

Mine is an humble attempt to promote the prevalence of the true Spirit of Christianity. In recommending the doctrine which this book particularly enforces, I know that I am justified by the

to the elements and principles of natural reason and philosophy. Wherefore the apostle would have them dead to the rudiments of the world, for they are only the commandments and doctrines of MEN, vainly puffed up by their FLESHLY mind, and science falsely so called, consisting of foolish and unlearned questions, which serve only to GENDER STRIFE. (2 Tim. ii. 23.)

The apostle gives Timothy a description of human learning unaccompanied with divine grace; and says, that "it is proud, knowing nothing, but doting about questions and strifes of words, whereof cometh envy, strife, railings, evil surmises, perverse disputings of men of corrupt minds, and destitute of the truth." (1 Tim. vi. 4. 2 Tim. ii. 14.) He therefore bids him put them in remembrance, charging them, before the Lord, not to strive with words to no profit, but to the perverting of the hearer; for they will increase into more ungodliness, (they will cause infidels to grow more obstinate and disputatious in defence of their unbelief,) and their words will eat as cankers (they will, by submitting the claims of Christianity to human reason only, eat up and destroy its very essence, which is divine). Therefore he again dissuades "foolish and unlearned questions, knowing that they do gender strifes;" that instead of settling disputes, and confirming men in the faith, they provoke controversy, multiply doubts, and are ultimately a fruitful cause of infidelity. "If you are determined to rely on reasoning," said the Tindals, Collins's, Morgans, Chubbs, and Paines, "we will accept your challenge, and fight you with the weapons of your own choice." They fought; and in the opinions of many deluded persons, were often victorious in the field of syllogism.

It is a sad instance of imprudence in the leaders of our Christian warfare, when they give up the sword of the Spirit, and rely entirely on the φρηνικα σαρκος for protection and defence. The doctrine of grace furnishes a panoply.

holy

holy scriptures *, by the church, by the tenets of the most learned and virtuous of the dissenters, and the greatest divines of this country, who have displayed their abilities either by the press or the pulpit. I claim no merit, but that of endeavouring to rescue the true and most momentous doctrine of the Gospel from the neglect and contempt in which it has been involved, during this century, by false policy and partiality, expressing their rancorous hatred to sects, deemed, at various times, injurious to certain worldly interests and temporary purposes of state. Christianity itself has been wounded by weapons, aimed only at men, whose political sentiments might perhaps be wrong, though their religious were, for the most part, strictly conformable to scripture †, and beneficial to every community.

I confess myself, in this attempt, to be only the pupil of those GREAT MASTERS whose opinions I have copiously cited, that they may be both an ornament and defence to my imperfect manual of CHRISTIAN PHILOSOPHY. Some of the greatest deceased divines of the church of England, next to the scriptures, are my chief authority. Happy am I to sit at the feet of such instructors; men, whose learning and abilities were of the first magnitude, and whose piety and goodness of heart

* “He who doubts it, quarrels not with our creed, but our grammar; and instead of going to church to be instructed better, he ought to be sent to school.” Bp. HICKMAN.

“The pure word of God neither is nor has been the sole criterion of orthodoxy.”

† Many who dislike the discipline and communion of our church, firmly adhere to the articles of it.

If some appear to think the husk and shell of more value than the kernel, is there not reason to suppose that they are warped in their judgment of things by some corrupt principle, some narrow, worldly motive?

seem

seem to have vied, for excellence, with their vigorous understandings, and accurate knowledge of scriptural theology. It is honour enough to be merely instrumental in republishing their salutary doctrines, and giving them the inconsiderable sanction of my public, though single vote. If they were now alive, they would be most anxiously diligent, in the present state of Christianity, in exciting the true spirit of vital and experimental religion. Never was there more occasion for their zeal and activity than now; and it appears to me, that their mode of recommending Christianity was a right mode, because, among other reasons, it has the test of experience in its favour.

The fact is incontrovertible, that in their times it was greatly successful. The true spirit of Christianity, during their ministry of the Gospel, mightily grew and prevailed. Infidelity was uncommon and infamous; and the mild, meek, placid temper of the Gospel was deemed, even in the highest ranks of society, not only conducive to happiness, but ornamental. Religious grace was valued above all graceful accomplishments. Men gloried in maintaining, openly and consistently, the Christian character; and the force of truth, not weakened by false politics, made it even a fashion.

I have laboured to revive the principles of those times; not without a hope, that they may have similar success in our day, if duly encouraged by high example. Men are doubtless, now as well as ever, susceptible of religious impressions, if properly enforced on EVANGELICAL authority. The times, it is said, are altered; but let it be remembered, that men make the times, and that men are very much modelled by books and all public instruction.

It

It is certainly unwise, in the present adverse circumstances of Christendom, to neglect or discountenance any mode of effectually disseminating and confirming the Christian faith, more especially a mode which like this has in past times been found successful, and is authorized by scripture.

For myself, I must beg leave to say, what is indeed sufficiently evident, that I have been in search of truth, not of favour or advantage. I have deemed religion lovely enough to be wedded without a dowry. I have had no sinister view, but have employed my hours of leisure in a way which I thought might be most beneficial to my fellow-creatures and my country. If I am wrong in my doctrine; if my GREAT MASTERS have instructed me erroneously, I am open to conviction, and shall rejoice to be better informed. I will say with the poet, addressing the Father of Lights,

“ If I am right, thy GRACE impart,
 “ Still in the right to stay;
 “ If I am wrong, O teach my HEART
 “ To find that better way.”

In the mean time, I make this offering to my fellow-mortals, labouring, like myself, in pursuit of happiness, though, many of them, in a different mode; and I dedicate it, with sincere devotion, to TRUTH, PIETY, AND PEACE.

A P P E N D I X.

No. I.

Curfory Remarks on one or two Objections in Mr. Paine's laft Pamphlet, againft the Authenticity of the Goffel.

IT is much againft my opinion of propriety to recommend to public notice the writings of infidels, by animadverting upon them; it is ftill more fo, to quote their cavils, though with an intent to refute them. What is this, indeed, but to contribute to the diffemination of their errors, while it gratifies their vanity? Mr. Gibbon avowed that FAME was his object; and it may be fufpected, that the greater part of fceptical or infidel writers are pleafed with thofe answers and refutations, which, though they are meant to difcountenance them, yet do, in fact, contribute, more than any thing elfe, to their publicity, notoriety, or, as they may conceive, to their GLORY.

But with refpect to Mr. Paine, his notoriety is already fo great, as fcarcely to admit of increafe; and there is too much reason to fear, that his infidel writings will attraft general notice, at leaft among the lower claffes, without any aid from controversial oppofition. I think, therefore, I fhall do no harm, if, unfortunately, I fhould do

do no good, by making one or two remarks on his recent attack on Christianity.

Mr. Paine is supposed, by his partisans, to have laid the axe to the root of revealed religion. His blows, indeed, are violent; but they miss their aim. His weapon is blunted and repelled, by striking against a solid substance. Many such strokes have, at various times, been levelled at Christianity; but the hardy tree, rooted deeply in the hearts of men, and watered by the dews of Heaven, has vegetated with fresh vigour, and, after the operation of lopping, diffused its branches with additional luxuriance.

In Mr. Paine's theological works there is, indeed, little NOVELTY. His objections have been frequently considered, and, for the most part, removed. They are, however, NEW to the young and the unlearned, who seldom possess time, books, or inclination, sufficient to qualify them as judges of their solidity. Mr. Paine's political opinions contribute much to recommend, among many, his theological; and thus party zeal is unfortunately excited in favour of religious scepticism or actual infidelity. From a variety of causes, peculiar to the present times and circumstances, there is too much reason to apprehend, that Mr. Paine's theological pamphlet is too favourably received; and that it will contribute to diffuse licentiousness, both of principles and practice. It is not from real novelty, or the peculiar ability of the author, but from temporary circumstances, that it will derive its malignant efficacy. I am not presumptuous enough in my own powers, to suppose myself able to counteract it. But I have attempted it throughout this book, not doubting that some of those many learned and ingenious divines, who, by their high situation in the church, enjoy enjoy ample leisure, possess extensive libraries, and all other opportunities for information, will step forward to oppose an attack, which tends to undermine the whole fabric of the visible CHURCH, and which, if successful, must render their high offices not only superfluous, but ridiculous ; their dignities not only badges of folly, but, which is worse, of knavish hypocrisy.

Mr. Paine is an additional instance to prove that men, deeply immersed in the affairs of the world, and considering its politics as matters of the first, if not the only importance, usually bring with them dispositions to the study of Christianity, which render them blind to its EVIDENCE and EXCELLENCE. They come with a pride and confidence in their own reason, a state of mind peculiarly offensive to the SOVEREIGN of Heaven, who resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble.

The kingdom of Christ not being of this world, they view it as aliens, not only with indifference, but disaffection. Indeed, they seldom give themselves the trouble to study, as they ought, the nature of its transcendent polity.

It is an old observation, and confirmed by daily experience, that men are apt to condemn what they do not understand. Mr. Paine, indeed, is not deficient in understanding. He has given indubitable proofs of great sagacity ; but his sagacity, applied to religion, is that of the NATURAL man, as the Apostle describes him. There is a SPIRITUAL UNDERSTANDING ; an understanding irradiated by divine grace, necessary to comprehend the things of the Spirit, without which a man is scarcely better qualified to judge of the gospel, as it is GRACE AND TRUTH, than the blind to decide on the beauty of a picture. He may descant on words and syllables. He may view the letter

letter of the scriptures as a critic, a logician, an historian; but there is a veil on his heart, which prevents him from perceiving that witness or testimony of the Spirit, which carries conviction, in defiance of all difficulties and obscurities in the letter. The Gospel is the ministration of Spirit and life, and the POWER OF GOD unto salvation. This POWER OF GOD is not to be limited in its action, to the ability of any man or set of men to suggest or answer objections to any particular portions of the scripture. It shines on, however men may cavil. Like the moon, it continues to illuminate the night, unaffected by the poor ignorant animals who bark at the benign radiance. There is internal evidence in Mr. Paine's pamphlet, that he is unhappily unacquainted with the ministration of the Spirit and the POWER OF GOD, as it is described in the Gospel, and experienced by true believers. He is out of his province, where he treats of theology, and resembles the philosopher of antiquity, who gave lectures to Hannibal on the art of war.

But Mr. Paine is not only ignorant of Christianity; he is prejudiced against it. His politics appear to him incompatible with the power of the church; and to undermine the church, he levels his blow at the whole of Christianity. He pierces Christ, to stab the priesthood through his sides.

As the policy of monarchical countries has made the church an ally of the state, he endeavours to weaken the state, by demolishing its ally. Religion in France, corrupted by political artifice, and depraved by superstition, was favourable to slavery. He transfers his hatred from religion so abused, to ALL religion but deism. He considers revelation as a mere state contrivance; not aware that the church and kingdom of Christ subsist, independently of all external authority, in the hearts of all true believers, in every clime, united by the Holy Ghost, under their king and priest, JESUS CHRIST. The living temple of the human heart would still stand, if all the temples of stone, in the violent and wicked contentions of politicians, were demolished and swept away with the besom of destruction. The whole legions of France, supposing them united under the banners of Mr. Paine, (and I am far from thinking that the whole of that nation, or even a majority, would enlist in the cause of infidelity,) would be unable to destroy THIS TEMPLE, not made with hands, not cemented with mortar, but with the Spirit of holiness and love. But Mr. Paine's PREJUDICE against local churches, (all which have been corrupted,) leads him, most unjustly and unphilosophically, to hate the truly CATHOLIC invisible church, which is far above the politics of this world, and too pure to admit the abuses introduced by despotism and knavery imposing upon folly.

Mr. Paine takes what has been called "a short method," with the Christians, or supporters of Christianity. He goes through and explodes the whole of the Old and New Testament, in the pages of a trivial pamphlet. My limits will not, at present, suffer me to enter on the objections which he makes to the Old Testament. Indeed I am ready to confess myself unable to defend or explain all those parts which are excepted against by Mr. Paine, and appear to be really difficult and obscure. But they have often been defended and explained by others, with great learning and sagacity.

I am more particularly concerned, as indeed are all Christians, with the New Testament; and not so much with the LETTER, as with the SPIRIT. Mr. Paine's cavils against the LETTER have been often

Q

often made, and well refuted. I beg the reader, who is not firmly settled in the faith by BETTER EVIDENCE than any human learning can afford, to study with attention, adequate to the important subject, Dr. TOWNSON and Dr. LARDNER on the Gospels, and Mr. WEST on the Resurrection*. He will conclude, from a perusal of their excellent books, that there is cause sufficient for every pious, humble man to give his full assent to all the essential parts of the Gospel history; to be rooted in faith, to rest in hope, and to abound in charity. Let him wish Mr. Paine a BETTER MIND, and then suffer his books to take their natural course, as many of the same kind have done, to the gulph of oblivion.

I shall advert only to one or two principal objections made by Mr. Paine, leaving the rest to those who excel and delight in critical theology. From the specimen I give, I mean no more than that the young or unlearned reader should see that Mr. Paine is not yet entitled to the epithet bestowed on one of the schoolmen, that of IRREFRAGABILIS, or the UNANSWERABLE.

I pass by the indecency and blasphemy of the introductory objections which he makes to the New Testament, with a contemptuous silence. All that is advanced on this occasion, has been well considered and answered, long before Mr. Paine was brought into existence.

I refer the reader to Dr. TOWNSON, for a satisfactory account of the difference in the genealogies of Christ, as given by St. Matthew and St. Luke; though I shall have occasion to mention them presently. In the mean time, I proceed to the GE-

* Dr. Trapp on the Gospels, is a very useful book for the unlearned.

NERAL objection. The general objection to the credibility of the Gospel history is made by Mr. Paine in the following words :

“ The presumption is,” says he, “ that the “ books called the Evangelists, and ascribed to “ Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John, were not “ written by Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John,
 “ and that they are IMPOSITIONS. The disordered “ state of the history, in these few books, THE “ SILENCE OF ONE BOOK UPON MATTERS RELATED
 “ IN ANOTHER, and the DISAGREEMENT that is to “ be found among them, implies that they are “ the productions of some unconnected indivi“ duals, many years after the things they pretend
 “ to relate ; each of whom made his own LEGEND ;
 “ and not the writings of men, living intimately
 “ together, as the men called the Apostles are “ supposed to have done ; in fine, that they are “ MANUFACTURED, as the books of the Old Tes“ tament have been, by other persons than those “ whose names they bear.”

This paragraph evinces Mr. Paine's ignorance of the dates of the Gospel's publication, the particular occasions on which they were written, and the peculiar scope or purpose of each writer. It is an allowed truth, that all the Evangelists wrote a considerable time after the ascension of our Saviour, at different periods, for different purposes, from different places, to different descriptions of men ; all which the reader may see well explained in Dr. TOWNSON's Discourses on the Gospel.

But for the sake of readers busily engaged in the world, who may not have read, or be inclined to read, Dr. Townson's, or other books on the subject, I will submit a few considerations, which, I think, will remove this general objection, which arises chiefly from “ THE SILENCE OF

“ ONE BOOK UPON MATTERS RELATED IN THE “ OTHER.”

The Times and Places of writing the Four Gospels were as follows :

Gospels.	Place.	From our Lord's Ascension.
St. Matthew's	Judea,	64 yrs.
St. Mark's,	Rome,	64
St. Luke's,	Greece,	64
St. John's,	Ephesus,	68

Or, according to Dr. Owen,

St. Matthew's,	Jerusalem, for the use of the Jewish converts,	38
St. Luke's,	Corinth, for the use of the Gentile converts,	53
St. Mark's,	Rome, for the use of Christians at large,	63
St. John's,	Ephesus, to confute the heresy of CERINTHUS,	69

The times of writing are differently given by the learned Dr. Mill, in his Prolegomena to the New Testament : thus,

			From the Ascension.
St. Matthew wrote	—	—	61
St. Mark,	—	—	63
St. Luke,	—	—	64
St. John,	—	—	97

Each of the Evangelists had a particular view or intention in writing his Gospel history ; at the same time that he calculated it for general information in all ages of militant Christianity.

By the way, I must observe, that the distance of time, from our Lord's ascension, to the writing
of

of the Gospels, (erroneously stated by Dr. Watts, in the quotation from him in the preceding pages,) furnishes me with an argument in favour of my main doctrine. During sixty, seventy, or perhaps nearly a hundred years, Christianity flourished without the assistance of any written Gospel. This must have been by the Spirit's immediate influence. It does not appear, that when the apostolical epistles were written, any of the Gospels, which we now have, were extant or known. They are not mentioned, nor is there any allusion to them, in the EPISTLES. Yet it is clear from the epistles, that there were large churches or societies of Christians—without a written Gospel—except that which was written on the heart of the humble believer by the Spirit's ministration.

To return to Mr. Paine's objection, concerning the "silence of one Gospel on matters related in another."

This will not appear at all wonderful, when it is considered, that St. Matthew wrote to the Jews only; St. Mark, (under the dictation of St. Peter,) to ALL Christians; St. Luke, to the GENTILE converts; St. John, to certain heretics, who denied the pre-existence and divinity of Christ; and that they wrote at very distant places, and at very different times, under circumstances probably no less various. But, to be a little more particular. St. Matthew wrote at Jerusalem, to the Jews only; those, I mean, of the Jews, who were converted to Christianity. As they lived near the scene of action, and many of them had probably observed our Saviour, and heard his discourses, he omitted many things, as well known to them, and mentioned others with a conciseness which he would not have approved, had he been writing to foreigners, or persons totally unacquainted with the subjects of his his history. The other Evangelists very properly vary from him in explaining what he left less distinct, in expatiating where he observes a brevity, in adding what he omitted; as was reasonable, since they wrote considerably after him, and to persons, who, it must be supposed, were unacquainted with the customs, the language, and even the country of Judea.

If it be asked, what becomes of the inspiration of the Gospels, if the writers thus conducted them according to the rules of human prudence? I answer, in the words of Dr. Townson, "The Holy Spirit sanctified their hearts with a lively and powerful sense of spiritual things; enlightened their minds with a just knowledge of the truth; and endued them, with wisdom, (or prudence,) to relate the life of Christ in a manner becoming the subject, and suitable to their SEVERAL DESIGNS: and these gifts, which exalted the natural powers of their minds, without DESTROYING them, would produce verity and propriety, but not IDENTITY of relation." They reported such words and deeds, as conduced to the purpose of converting or establishing the persons whom they immediately addressed; while the SPIRIT of God took care that the whole of their history, as contained in four narratives, should convey information sufficient, in all necessary points, not only for their own age, but for ALL ages of Christianity.

"They VARY," says the objector, "and therefore they cannot be true and faithful narrators*." But in what do they vary? Does one

* "Neque enim continuo vacillat totius scripturæ auctoritas, sicuti variet vel in verbis vel in sensu. Spiritus ille Divinus, mentium apostolicarum moderator, passus est suos ignorare quædam et LABI."

ERASMUS in Matt. ii. 6.

of

of them say that our Saviour rose from the dead, and the other, that he did not? Do they vary in any important point of DOCTRINE? No; but they vary in a few historical circumstances, which affect not the MAIN PURPOSE in the smallest degree. Their variations in non-essentials, and their agreement in essentials, is a mark of veracity. Their variations prove that they did not write in concert, or with a design to deceive; for if they had, they would have taken care to have avoided what would expose them immediately to the objections of their opponents; and their agreement in essentials, in the grand purpose of shewing that Man was to be favoured with the Holy Spirit, is a proof that Providence superintended them; and that they were so strongly convinced of this truth, and had it so present to their minds, that they could not possibly omit it, or vary in it, however else they might vary.

Theophylact says, very sensibly, Δι' αὐτο τοῦτο μάλλον ἀληθεύουσιν, ὅτι μὴ κατὰ πάντα ὁμοφωνήσαν. ἐνομιδίσαν γὰρ αὐ, ὅτι συγκαθίσαντες ἀλλήλοις καὶ συμβουλευσάμενοι, ἐγράψαν. νυν δὲ ὁ παρελείψεν οὗτος, ἐγράψεν ἐκεῖνος· καὶ διὰ τοῦτο, δοκῶσιν ἐν τισὶν διαλλατλειν*. “On this very account,” says Theophylact, “they may be more easily believed to have spoken the truth, because they do not every where speak alike; for if they had, they would have been supposed to have written in collusion; but, as the case is now, what one is silent upon, another has written; and, therefore, they appear in some things to differ;” but they differ ἐν τοῖς ἐλαχίστοις, in very minute things—as he had just before observed. Still keeping in mind, that Mr. Paine’s chief objection is, “THE SILENCE OF ONE BOOK (of the Gospel) UPON MATTERS RE-

* Theophylact. Proem. in Matt. Evangelium.

LATED IN THE OTHER," let us now proceed to St. Mark.

St. Mark's Gospel was dictated by St. Peter, who was acquainted with St. Matthew's. It was in many things anticipated by St. Matthew. It was published in Italy, perhaps at Rome, and addressed to Christians in general; but particularly to the new converts, both pagan and Jewish. Some of them might have already seen St. Matthew's Gospel, and all of them might hereafter see it; and therefore St. Mark is silent on many precepts and parables, as being already known from the narrative of his predecessor. In some matters, St. Mark explains and describes more fully than St. Matthew, because he addressed himself in part to the Gentiles, who could not know so well as the Jews, to whom alone St. Matthew wrote, what related to the Jewish language, customs, scriptures, or topography. When he repeats, which is very often, for very good reasons, what St. Matthew has told, he adds some circumstance of explanation, necessary to the Gentiles, that is, to foreigners, who were very little acquainted with either the country or the inhabitants of Jerusalem. It was necessary to repeat many facts related by St. Matthew, because, in that age, the art of printing being unknown, and copies of the Gospels very difficult to be procured, especially by the poor, it must, in the nature of things, have happened frequently, that the persons for whom St. Mark wrote, Jews at a great distance from Judea, and pagans, (both newly converted,) had never had a sight of St. Matthew's Gospel. Very difficult must it have been, in those days, to have sent many copies from Jerusalem to Rome, even if many existed, and if the converts near Jerusalem had not demanded ALL that could be multiplied tiplied by the slow process of the hand-writing. St. Mark's narrative is therefore nearly the same as St. Matthew's, with the addition of such matters as might be necessary to the persons immediately addressed, and the omission of other matters which were either not essential, or, if they were, might be learned from St. Matthew's Gospel, already published.

St. Mark, it has been already said, is supposed to have written under the entire direction, or rather the dictation, of St. Peter; and it is observable, that St. Peter is represented as present at all the actions and sayings of our Lord recorded in this Gospel. And this circumstance will account for St. Mark's "silence on some matters" related by the other Evangelists." The narrative of St. Mark seems to be RESTRICTED, in great measure, to such transactions as St. Peter was present at; which, while it adds to the authenticity of the narrative, accounts for the omission of deeds or words, at which St. Peter was not present, and thus obviates Mr. Paine's objection.

St. Luke's Gospel was designed for the Gentiles only. Of this there is much internal evidence. He studiously avoids Hebrew words, and uses, wherever it can be done, Greek terms, to express the ideas of the Hebrew*. And there is one most striking particular in St. Luke, which arose from his addressing the Gentiles only. The fine PARABLE OF THE PRODIGAL, to be found in none other of the Gospels, was admitted by St. Luke, because it conveyed a doctrine highly encouraging to the GENTILE, who was that younger son, returned, at last, to his father, and received with affection. St. Matthew is silent upon this parable, because writing, as he did, to the Jews, he knew, especially at that earlier period when he wrote, that it would not be agreeable to their narrow prejudices, and their ideas of exclusive salvation. St. Mark and St. John are silent upon it, because it was not necessary to their purposes.

* Where St. Matthew uses the Hebrew word, Amen, St. Luke renders it by the Greek ναι, xi. 51, and αλαθως, ix. 27.

St. Luke's genealogy of Christ differs much from St. Matthew's; and Mr. Paine triumphs greatly on the difference*. But let it be duly noticed, that St. Matthew, writing to the Jews only, was contented with tracing the genealogy of the Messiah, for their satisfaction, up to David and Abraham; while St. Luke, writing to the Gentiles, traced it up to ADAM, the father of all mankind, Gentile as well as Jew; thus encouraging the GENTILES, by making it appear that they, as descendants of Adam, were also related to the Messiah, as well as the Jews.

Another remarkable circumstance in St. Luke, evinces that the Evangelists adapted their narratives, as wisdom directed, to the particular descriptions of persons to whom they were immediately addressed. St. Luke mentions the name of the Roman emperors that reigned when Christ was born, and when himself began to preach. It was the practice of the Gentiles to mark the æra of events by the reigning emperor. St. Matthew, St. Mark, and St. John observe a silence concerning the reigning emperor. It did not appear to them necessary or expedient to use this mode of dating events, when writing to Jews, or persons acquainted with Judea and its history.

Let it be attended to, that there were in circulation, before some of the Gospels were written,

* See Trapp on the Gospels.

a great many narratives (διήγησις) of our Saviour's life and death, by unknown authors, which being read in certain parts, might render it unnecessary to dwell on some particulars which they might have recorded with truth and accuracy. It has long been my opinion, (but I offer it with the diffidence of one who ventures a conjecture,) that the four Gospels which we now have, were written to supply the defects, correct the errors, and give confirmation to the truths, which appeared in these popular narratives, at which St. Luke seems to hint in the very entrance or introduction to his Gospel. St. Luke, when he says, that MANY had taken in hand to set forth in ORDER a declaration of those things which are most surely believed by us, speaks not of ST. MATTHEW or ST. MARK by name. He gives them no preference. He could not mean by MANY, two only. He probably meant the ΔΙΗΓΗΣΕΙΣ * above-mentioned, which he seems to censure for inaccuracy. It would be highly credible, (if we had not information,) that there were narratives handed about of merely human composition. Such events as had happened in Judea must have excited curiosity; and the pleasure of relating extraordinary events naturally prompted men to gratify it. Gospel histories,

* There were many διήγησις (narratives) and παραδοσις (traditions). But there were two very celebrated, and called Gospels; the one, according to the Hebrews; the other, according to the Ægyptians. These were a collection of facts and sayings, collected from oral tradition. The first maintained its credit long after the publication of the four Evangelists, and was a favourite Gospel. It was read in the church during three hundred years. Some think, and I subscribe to their opinion, that this was the original HEBREW of St. Matthew. But arguments are not wanting to prove that it was another.—See this very curious subject discussed in MILLIAR Proleg.

therefore, abounded*. The Gospels of the four Evangelists were VARIED, according as the neceffity which appeared to exist from the errors, the defects, or misrepresentations of the διηγήσεις, or narratives, which were circulated among the persons to whom the four Evangelists wrote, seemed to require.

But to proceed to St. John. He wrote many years after St. Matthew. The history of Christ, at near a hundred years after his ascension, was probably pretty well known by the Gospels, and the common narratives called διηγήσεις and παράδοσεις. He wrote chiefly to correct mistakes in DOCTRINE; giving at the same time a narrative for the use of those who might still be uninformed in the history. He wrote against a heresy. He had to set men right as to the DIGNITY of Christ. Therefore there are many things in his Gospel on which the others are SILENT; and he, on the other hand, is silent on many things, because repetition of what they had given the world would have been either of little use, or quite superfluous, to the persons whom he immediately addressed.

By thus fairly considering the different times, places, persons, and other circumstances, in which the several Gospels were written, we shall not be at a loss to account rationally, and to the satisfaction of every GOOD MIND, for omissions, variations, and additions, in the evangelical histories; and the cavils of unbelievers will never, it is to be hoped, prevail upon serious, humble Christians, who love truth, and seek it with simplicity of heart,

* Mr. Toland, in his Amyntor, names eighty books which he thinks have as good a right to be admitted into the CANON as those which already appear there.

See JONES on the Canon of the New Testament, vol. I. page 5.
unbiassed

unbiaſſed by politics, or worldly motives, to renounce the WRITTEN WORD, much leſs the SPIRIT of Chriſtianity.

But though the written word were proved to contain many marks of human infirmity, lapſes of memory, and errors of judgment, yet the good Chriſtian, having the WITNESS IN HIMSELF, would go on his way rejoicing, hoping, and believing to the end. If no other event had been announced in the WRITTEN WORD, than that (agreeably to general and uniform TRADITION) the Holy Ghoſt was ſent to reſide among men, after our Lord's aſcenſion, this alone would be GLAD TIDINGS, or an evangelium ſufficient to make him exult in the name and privileges of a Chriſtian. If the four Gospels are uninſpired, yet the writers, as good men and firm believers, were certainly under the ordinary influence of the Holy Spirit, and related the truth as exactly as their abilities qualified them for narration. They had, moſt evidently, no intention to deceive. Impoſtors could never have written with ſuch ſimplicity. So that though their hiſtories ſhould be found not quite exempt from human errors, as no other hiſtory ever was exempt, yet ſtill the main point of revelation is clear. The gift of the Spirit is announced by them. It has in all ages of the church been EXPERIENCED; and though all the books in the world were deſtroyed, it would remain. The tradition is now too extenſive to be ever loſt. And what mortal, who, as the poet ſays, comes into the world "juſt
" to look about him and to die," will preſume to ſay, that the ETERNAL GOD cannot make his will known to man, by conſtant and immediate revelation, without the aid of the penman or the printer? Diſputants, indeed, contending for praiſe and preferment, will wrangle on this, and all other points; but while they wrangle, the humble Christian believes, and is happy.
other

There are two particulars of variation, which Mr. Paine lays great stress upon, and which, therefore, I shall take under consideration.

1st. "Not any of these writers," says he, "agree in reciting exactly the written inscription, short as it is, which they tell us was put over Christ when he was crucified. Matthew says it was, This is Jesus, the King of the Jews; Mark, The King of the Jews; Luke, This is the King of the Jews; John, Jesus of Nazareth, the King of the Jews."

This objection has no more claim to novelty than importance; and I only consider it, to shew the unlearned reader how easily it may be obviated. Let him conclude from this, as he may fairly do, that most of Mr. Paine's objections, however plausible, may, upon impartial examination, be removed.

The words on the cross were in THREE languages; Hebrew, Greek, and Latin. St. Matthew, writing to the Hebrews, probably selected that which was in their own language, in which the word JESUS signifies a Saviour. As this was intended to be read by the Jews, it might be designed, by Pilate's advisers, to heighten the insult and mockery, by calling Christ a Saviour, as well as a king: in Hebrew, it certainly admitted of that interpretation, while it also stood for a proper name.

St. Mark, writing at Rome, purposely selected the LATIN words.—Latin was Pontius Pilate's own language; and he, probably, as it is well known was the case with the Romans, prided himself in not using any other language than his own; so he omits, in this inscription, which being Latin, may be supposed to be of his own dictation, the Hebrew words Jesus and Nazareth, and inserts, consistently with the usual brevity of Latin inscriptions, Rex Judæorum—the King of the Jews.—Indeed the words, This is, were in course understood, and might be supplied by the Evangelists; but they were inserted by St. Matthew, and were common to all the inscriptions. St. Luke, like St. Mark, took his from the Latin Rex Judæorum.

St. John's is probably from the Greek inscription. And he says, "Jesus of Nazareth, the King of the Jews," which, there is no doubt, was an exact translation of the Greek words. He says, addressing foreigners, as the inscription itself also did, "Jesus of Nazareth." The word Jesus would not convey the idea of a Saviour to the Greeks; it was to them only a proper name, therefore he adds the Nazarene, or "of Nazareth," as a matter of historical information. The Jews knew the native place of Jesus, but the Greeks did not, as Nazareth was an inconsiderable town. This addition might be intended as a mark of contempt, and to shew the Greeks, or foreigners in general, that the Jews disdained a king who originated from so paltry a place as Nazareth. Nathaniel's question in St. John is, "Can any good thing come out of Nazareth?" Thus it appears, that the inscription being in three different languages, might, for very good reasons, in the opinion of those who placed it over the cross, have some variations adapted to the various readers, and consistent with the views of the various writers.

Mr. Paine adds, that "Mark says Christ was crucified at the third hour—nine in the morning; and John says, it was the sixth hour—twelve at noon." Here a note is added added in the margin ; “ According to St. John, “ sentence was not passed till the sixth hour, “ (noon,) and consequently the execution could “ not be till the afternoon ; but Mark says expressly, he was crucified at the third hour — “ nine in the morning.”

Here certainly is a difficulty ; but the learned have informed us that St. John parted the days as we do, at midnight *, contrary both to the Roman and Jewish custom ; the sixth hour, therefore, is not noon, but six o'clock in the morning, when sentence was passed ; and various circumstances might take place, added to the slowness of the procession, to retard the execution till nine, the very time fixed by St. Mark. St. John's method of dividing the day was not Jewish or Roman, as it has been said, but ASIATIC. St. John either learned or taught this method in Asia Minor, where were seven churches, which differed from others in the time of keeping Easter ; and which affirmed, that they followed, in this variation of times and seasons, the institution of St. John ; a circumstance which is very material, as it shews that St. John had turned his attention to the regulation of TIME.

Dr. Townson, to whom every student of the LITERAL Gospel is much indebted, advances other arguments on this head, for which I refer to his Discourses.

It is inconsistent with my ideas of propriety to quote many of Mr. Paine's objections † ; and indeed my limits will not admit a full examination of his book, if I were inclined to go through it, or, on the present occasion, thought it necessary.

* According to the Nachtbemerken.

† I would not cull the flowers of those weeds, whose roots I wish to destroy.

In

In answer to what Mr. Paine has said against that part of the evangelical history which relates to the interment, resurrection, and ascension of our Saviour, I refer the reader to another volume of Dr. Townson's, expressly written on these subjects, if any one thinks it necessary to reconsider them, on account of Mr. Paine's objections. My opinion is, that they who have the witness of the Spirit will not be at all concerned about Mr. Paine's cavils, except from the benevolent motive of endeavouring to prevent their ill effect on the thoughtless and malignant part of mankind, who may be confirmed in their neglect or hatred of Christianity, by his virulent invective against it.

Those who believe, not only with an historical faith, but with the FAITH THAT GOD GIVETH; not only in the letter, written on perishable materials, but also, in the Spirit, the everlasting Gospel of immediate grace, will not be in the least danger of WAVERING, even if the infidels could prove that the scriptures are merely human narratives, with the errors of humanity.

It is presumptuously said by Hosius, bishop of Warmia in Poland, " We have now bid adieu to " the scriptures, having seen so many, not only " different, but contrary interpretations of them. " Let us rather hear God himself speak, than " apply ourselves, or trust our salvation, to those " jejune elements. There is no need," he proceeds, " of being skilful in the law and the scriptures, but of being taught of God. That labour is ill employed," says the prelate, " that " is bestowed on the scriptures; for the scripture " is a creature, and a beggarly element." Far be it from us to think so. Christ commanded his immediate bearers to search the scriptures; and St. Paul says, " they are profitable for doctrine, " for

“ for reproof, for correction, for instruction in “ righteousness, that the man of God may be “ perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good “ works ;” that is, they are profitable, or conducive to the improvement of us in morality, as well as in the true doctrine. But although we cannot say what Hofius erroneously said ; yet we may say, because the scripture says it, “ God’s grace is “ sufficient for us”—his grace mediately afforded by his word, and immediately by his actual influence ; and having the TEACHING OF GOD, we shall not renounce our faith, though the Chubbs and the Paines should find matter for censure or ridicule in all the written books, from Genesis to the Apocalypse. FAITH, we read and know, is the gift of God ; and he it is who worketh in us both to will and to do of his good pleasure.

“ The word,” says Dr. Ridley, “ has not “ power of itself to work, in our UNDERSTAND-“ INGS, a faith in God, nor to influence the WILL,
 “ to a repentance from dead works, without the “ Holy Ghost.”

But he in whom the Holy Ghost has worked a faith in God, and whose will the Holy Ghost has influenced to repentance from dead works, may stand fast in the faith, rooted and established, in defiance of all that has been said by men engrossed by this world, and possessing its wisdom ;
 men who have arisen in almost every age, and confirmed the Christian doctrine, by promoting its discussion, and awakening Christians from the slumber of security.

“ When,” says Dr. Watts, “ we are attacked “ with argument to baffle our faith, and when “ false doctrines blow strong, and carry away
 “ many, how shall we be able to stand our ground,
 “ and hold fast our faith in Christ, if we have “ not

“ not the inward witness, the BEGINNING OF “ ETERNAL LIFE? Therefore it is that so many “ Christians WAVER and are led away, because “ they feel so little of the efficacy of the Holy “ Ghost in their hearts.”

If this then be the cause of wavering and falling away from Christ, I hope the believers in Christianity, and lovers of their fellow-creatures, will second, by their own endeavours, this attempt of mine, to promote the prevalence of a belief in the energy of the HOLY GHOST. The attempt, in an age like this, must be exposed to calumny and opposition. But every thing is to be borne with patience, in the cause of God and man.

Mr. Paine professes to be a believer in God, and a friend to man. It is, indeed, astonishing, that an advocate for the rights of man should set his face against the Gospel of Jesus Christ; for it is certain that the Gospel is the book, of all that were ever written, that favours most the rights of man, and the cause of equal liberty. Jesus Christ abolished slavery in Europe. Jesus Christ has humbled the rich and mighty. Jesus Christ has given a consequence to the POOR*, which they

* The New Testament abounds with passages, expressive of indignation against those among RICH men, who abuse wealth and power, for the purposes of oppression, cruelty, and despotism. As a specimen, I quote the following from the Epistle of St. JAMES.

“ Go to, now, ye RICH men; weep and howl for your miseries “ that shall come upon you.

“ Your riches are corrupted, and your garments are moth-eaten.

“ Your gold and silver is cankered, and the rust of them shall be “ a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire: ye “ have heaped treasure together for the last days.

“ Behold the HIRE OF THE LABOURERS WHICH HAVE REAPED
 “ DOWN YOUR FIELDS, which is of you kept back by fraud, “ crieth; and the cries of them that have REAPED are entered into “ the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth.

“ Ye have lived in pleasure on the earth, and been wanton; ye
 “ have nourished your hearts, as in a day of SLAUGHTER:

“ Ye have condemned and killed the JUST.” JAMES, v. 1—6.

never

never possessed amid the boasted freedom of Greece and Rome. Jesus Christ has done more to destroy the insolent distinctions which arose from the spirit of tyranny, than was ever done before or after him; and Jesus Christ suffered death for this benefaction to all mankind, as a seditious innovator, and an enemy to Cæsar. Jesus Christ is therefore entitled to the gratitude and veneration of every friend to truth, justice, and humanity, even if he were no more than a man, and his religion untrue. What have Sydney, Hampden, Locke, done or said, with such effect, in the cause of liberty, and in favour of the mass of mankind, as Jesus Christ? Let then all the friends of liberty and man be lovers of Jesus Christ; and let not their zeal for reforming the corruptions of Christianity (caused by statesmen, wishing to render it subservient to political views) lead them to renounce the comfortable and liberal doctrines of the genuine Gospel.

The Gospel recommends PEACE, and infallibly produces, by the Spirit's benign influence, such dispositions of mind, as must of necessity, if they were to prevail among the rulers of the world, put an end to all offensive war. It has not yet done so, for it has not yet sufficiently prevailed among the rulers of the world. But it has certainly softened the rigours of war; a favourable presage of its future efficacy, in totally abolishing it.

I wish Mr. Paine, as a politician and a philanthropist, if he be such, not to oppugn the great promoter of PEACE and LIBERTY. As a fellow man, (I wish I could add, a fellow Christian,) I warn him, from the kindest motives, to beware lest he be guilty of blasphemy against the Holy Ghost.

Mr. Paine himself says, "The great trait in the character of Jesus Christ is PHILANTHROPY."

Why

Why should Mr. Paine, then, oppose the prevalence of his benign doctrines? Christianity is a friend to order, but an enemy to despotism of every kind and degree. Why should Mr. Paine, then, join with the wicked despots of the earth, in the endeavour to exterminate Christianity? The late KING OF PRUSSIA, the greatest despot and butcher of mankind, was the prince of the unbelievers. He made infidelity a fashion in France; and behold the consequences! May they never extend to this country; where, God grant that LIBERTY may continue unimpaired by despotism or licentiousness; and RELIGION flourish, uncorrupted by hypocrisy or superstition, and unshaken by the assaults of infidelity!

No. II.

SINCE, in conformity to the Scriptures, I have recommended PRAYER* as one of the best modes of obtaining the evidence, and experiencing the excellence, of the Christian religion, I think it expedient to add some directions to facilitate the proper performance of this duty; and, for the sake of AUTHORITY, I have selected them from Bishop WILKINS, the first divine and philosopher of his age.

* ΠΟΛΥ ΙΣΧΥΣΙ ΔΕΗΣΙΣ ΔΙΚΑΙΟΥ ΕΝΕΡΓΟΤΜΕΝΗ. Jam. v. 16.

This is translated, "The effectual fervent prayer of the righteous man availeth much," which is tautology—for an effectual prayer, of course, availeth. It should be translated, "The prayer of a righteous or just man, being ENERGIIZED by the inward operation of the Spirit, availeth much."

"The

“ The first and chief matter to be prayed for,
 “ is the sanctification of our natures—that God’s “ kingdom may come into our hearts—that he would “ give unto us a new heart, and put a new Spirit “ within us—that he would take from us our stony “ heart, and bestow upon us hearts of flesh—that “ he would put within us the law of the spirit of “ life, which may make us free from the law of “ sin and death—that we may put on the new “ man, which, after God, is created in righteous“ ness and true holiness—that we may be rege“ nerate, and become new creatures, being born “ again of that incorruptible seed, the word of “ God.

“ That God would grant us, according to the “ riches of his glory, to be strengthened with “ might by his Spirit in the inward man.

“ That he would establish our hearts unblame“ able in holiness before God, even our Father, “ at the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ, with “ all his saints.

“ That the Spirit of Christ may dwell in us—
 “ that we may continue in the grace of God, and “ in the faith, grounded and settled, and may not “ be moved away from the hope of the Gospel.

“ Of this kind is the petition of David for him“ self—Create in me a clean heart, O Lord, and “ renew a right Spirit within me. And the apostle
 “ for others—The God of peace sanctify you “ throughout, that your whole spirit, and soul,
 “ and body may be preserved blameless unto the “ coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. .

“ Ezekiel, xxxvi. 26. Rom. viii. 7. Eph. iv. 24.
 “ 1 Pet. i. 23. Eph. iii. 16. 1 Theff. iii. 13. Rom. viii. 11.
 “ Acts, xiii. 43. Col. i. 13. Psal. li. 10. 1 Theff. v. 23.

“ That

“ That we may be transformed by the renewing
 “ of our minds—that we may be able to have a “ spiritual discerning of the things of God; being “ wise to that which is good, but simple and “ harmless to that which is evil.

“ That he would purge our consciences from “ DEAD WORKS, to serve the living God.

“ That they may be tender of his glory, and
 “ our own good; truly performing the offices “ which belong unto them, both in accusing and “ excusing us, according to the several occasions.

“ That he would circumcise our hearts, that we “ may set our affections on things above, and not on
 “ on earthly matters—that we may not be deceived “ with false appearances, but may approve the “ things that are most excellent.

“ That he would reform and sanctify our wills,
 “ that we may in every thing submit them unto “ his; delighting to do his will; not seeking our own
 “ will, but the will of him that sent us.

“ That he would rectify our memories, making “ them more faithful in retaining all such holy “ lessons as we shall learn, in recalling them to “ mind, according to opportunities; that we may “ be always ready to stir up our minds by way of “ remembrance, that we may never forget God.

“ And so, (for our parts, or outward man,)
 “ that we may become the temple of God, where “ his Spirit may dwell: that we may present our “ bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God,
 “ which is our reasonable service: that all our parts
 “ and members may be instruments of righteousness “ unto holiness.

“ Rom. xii. 2. 1 Cor. ii. 4. Rom. xvi. 19. Heb. ix. 14.
 “ Rom. ii. 29. Coll. iii. 2. Phil. i. 10. Pf. xl. 8.
 “ Joh. v. 30. 2 Pet. iii. 1. Deut. viii. 11. 1 Cor. iii. 16.
 “ Rom. xii. 1. Rom. vi. 13—19.

“ In

“ In which desires we may strengthen our “ faith with such arguments as these :

“ God only is able for this great work : in us “ dwelleth nothing that is good. It is he that must “ work in us both to will and to do of his good plea“ sure. It is not in our power to regenerate our“ selves ; for we are not born of blood, nor of the “ will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, (that is,
 “ not of natural created strength,) but of God.
 “ And he is able to do exceeding abundantly above
 “ all that we can ask or think. It is as easy for “ him to make us good, as to bid us be so.

“ He is willing, and hath promised to give “ unto us a new Spirit : to put his law into our in“ ward parts, to write it in our hearts. And if “ men that are evil know how to give good gifts
 “ to their children, how much more shall our Heavenly “ Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him ?
 “ He hath professed it to be his own will, even “ our sanctification ; and he cannot deny us the “ performance of his own will. He hath pro“ mised, that those who hunger and thirst after “ righteousness, shall be filled. And therefore, if “ he has in any measure given us this hunger, we “ need not doubt that he will give us this fulness
 “ likewise. He hath said that he delights to dwell “ with the sons of men. And what reason have we
 “ to doubt the success of our desires, when we “ beg of him to do that which he delights in ?

“ The next thing to be prayed for, is the obe“ dience of our lives, answerable to that in the “ Lord’s Prayer—thy will be done on earth as it “ is in Heaven. And here, likewise, we are to “ Rom. vii. 18. Phil. ii. 13. Joh. i. 13. Eph. iii. 20.

 “ Ezek. xxxvi. 26. Jer. xxxi. 33. Luke, xi. 13. Thes. iv. 3.
 “ Mat. v. 6. Prov. viii. 31.

“ petition

“ petition for spiritual grace, and abilities, both
 “ to perform, and to continue, and to increase in “ all holy duties.

“ For the performance of them, That he would “ lead us into the paths of righteousness—that with “ simplicity and godly sincerity we may have our con“ versation in this world—that denying all ungodli“ ness and worldly lusts, we may live soberly, righte“ ously, and godly, in this present world—that God “ would give us grace, whereby we may serve him “ acceptably with reverence and godly fear—that we “ may not any more be conformed unto this world—
 “ that being dead unto sin, we may live unto right“ eousness; not any longer spending the rest of our “ time in the flesh, to the lusts of men, but to the will “ of God—that the time past of our lives may suffice
 “ to have served divers lusts—that for the future
 “ we may walk as obedient children, not fashioning “ ourselves according to the former lusts of our igno“ rance; but as he who has called us is holy, so we “ may be holy in all manner of conversation.

“ To this purpose is that desire of David, O
 “ that my ways were directed to keep thy statutes!
 “ And in another place, Teach me to do thy will,
 “ for thou art my God: let thy good Spirit lead me
 “ into the land of uprightness. Elsewhere—Shew “ me thy ways, O Lord, and teach me thy paths:
 “ lead me into thy truth, and teach me; for thou art
 “ the God of my salvation. Teach me thy ways, O “ Lord, and I will walk in thy truth; unite my “ heart to fear thy name.

“ For our continuance in them—That we may “ serve him without fear, in holiness and righteousness

“ Psal. xxiii. 3. 2 Cor. i. 12. Tit. ii. 12. Heb. xii. 28.
 “ Rom. xii. 2. 1 Pet. ii. 21. Ib. iv. 2, 3. Ib. i. 14.
 “ Psal. cxix. 5. Ib. cxliii. 10. Ib. xxv. 4, 5. Ib. lxxxvi. 11.

R

“ before

“ before him, all the days of our lives : being stedfast
 “ and unmoveable, always abounding in the work of “ the Lord—Holding faith and a good conscience—
 “ Patiently continuing in well-doing, without weariness,
 “ as knowing that in due time we shall reap,
 “ if we faint not—Holding fast the profession of our “ faith, without wavering—that our hearts may be “ established with grace ; that amidst all our outward “ changes and losses, we may still hold fast
 “ our integrity.

“ Thus the apostle prays for the Thessalonians,
 “ that God would establish them in every good “ word and work.

“ For our increase in them—That God would “ make all grace to abound towards us—that we “ always having all-sufficiency to all things, may “ abound to every good work—that we may be strong “ in the Lord, and in the power of his might : being “ filled with the fruits of righteousness, unto the “ glory and praise of God—that forgetting those things “ which are behind, and reaching unto those things “ which are before, we may continually press towards
 “ the mark for the prize of the high calling of God.

“ Thus doth the apostle pray for the Hebrews—
 “ The God of peace make you perfect in every good “ work, to do his will, working in you that which “ is well-pleasing in his sight.—And Epaphras, for
 “ the Colossians—That they might stand perfect
 “ and complete in all the will of God.

“ Next to the precepts of the law, we are to “ consider the duties which the Gospel requires “ of us, namely, that we should repent and be-

“ Luke, i. 74, 75. 1 Cor. xv. 18. 1 Tim. i. 19.
 “ Rom. ii. 7. Gal. vi. 9. Heb. x. 23. Ib. xiii. 9.
 “ Job, ii. 3. 1 Thess. ii. 17. 2 Cor. ix. 8. 1 Thess. iv. 1.
 “ Eph. vi. 10. Phil. i. 11. Ib. iii. 14. Heb. xiii. 20, 21.
 “ Col. iv. 12. Acts, xi. 18.

“ lieve

“ lieve—that we should be careful to perform, to “ continue, and increase in all those particular du“ ties and graces which are comprehended under “ those two general heads.

“ So that from hence we are directed to pray,

“ For repentance—That since God hath, in love
 “ to our souls, vouchsafed unto us, in his Gospel,
 “ this privilege of repentance, which the covenant
 “ of works did not admit of, that he would also “ give us hearts for it, granting us repentance unto “ life—that he would convince us of the danger,
 “ and folly, and pollution of our sins, enabling “ us to mourn over them; bestowing upon us “ broken and contrite spirits—dissolving our stony “ hearts into that godly sorrow, which worketh re- “ pentance to salvation not to be repented of—That “ we may search and try our ways, and turn unto
 “ the Lord—Bringing forth fruits meet for repent- “ ance—Labouring to draw nigh unto God, by “ cleansing our hands, and purifying our hearts.

“ For faith—That God would discover to us
 “ the great need of a Saviour; and since he hath “ set forth his Son to be a propitiation through faith
 “ in his blood, and hath made him the Author of eter- “ nal salvation to all that obey him, that he would “ win over our souls to an earnest endeavour of “ acquaintance with him, and high esteem of “ him.

“ That God, who commanded the light to shine
 “ out of darkness, would shine into our hearts, to “ give us the light of the knowledge of the glory of “ God, in the face of Jesus Christ—that he would “ make us more especially inquisitive after the “ Psal. li. 17. 2 Cor. vii. 10. Lam. iii. 40. Mat. iii. 8.

 “ James, iv. 8. Rom. iii. 25. Heb. v. 9. 2 Cor. iv. 6.

“ saving experimental knowledge of him, in “ whom are laid up the treasures of wisdom and “ knowledge; whom to know, is perfect wisdom,
 “ and eternal life.

“ That he would count us worthy of his holy “ calling, and fulfil in us all the good pleasure of “ his goodness, and the work of faith with power—
 “ that the name of the Lord Jesus Christ may be “ glorified in us, and we in him.

“ That Christ may dwell in our hearts by faith,
 “ that we may be rooted and grounded in love; may “ be able to comprehend with all saints what is the “ breadth, and length, and depth, and height, and “ know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge,
 “ that we may be filled with all the fulness of God.

“ That we may truly value the exceeding riches
 “ of his grace, in his kindness towards us through “ Christ Jesus—Glorying in his Gospel, as being
 “ the power of God to salvation—Counting all things
 “ but loss and dung for the excellency of the know“ ledge of Christ Jesus, that we may win him, and “ be found in him; not having our own righteousness, “ which is of the law, but that which is through the “ faith of Christ.

“ That in all estates and conditions, we may “ learn to live by faith.

“ In regard of our temporal life, with all the “ various circumstances of it, whether prosperity, “ that by his grace of faith, we may keep our “ hearts in an holy frame of humility, meekness, “ disengagement from the world, and all outward “ confidences; or adversity, wherein this grace
 “ may serve to sweeten our afflictions, to support “ us under them, teaching us to profit by them,

“ Col. ii. 3. 2 Thes. i. 11, 12. Eph. iii. 17. Ib. ii. 7.
 “ Rom. i. 16. Phil. iii. 8.

“ to

“ to bear them meekly, to triumph over them;
 “ assuring the heart, that nothing is but by the “ disposal of God’s providence, who is infinitely
 “ wise, and merciful, and faithful.

“ In regard of spiritual life, both for our own “ justification, that we may not expect it from our “ own services or graces; not having our own “ righteousness, but that which is through the faith
 “ of Christ, the righteousness which is of God by “ faith. And so for the life of sanctification; that “ we may not live unto ourselves, but unto him who “ died for us, and rose again—that our conversation
 “ may be as becometh the Gospel of Christ, standing “ fast in one spirit, with one mind, striving together “ for the faith of the Gospel. Always remembering “ that we are not our own, but bought with a “ price, and therefore should make it our business
 “ to glorify Christ with our bodies and spirits, “ which are his.

“ That he would work in us a lively faith, as “ may make us rich in good works, that we may “ demean ourselves as becomes our professed sub- “ jection to the Gospel of Christ; walking worthy of “ that vocation wherewith we are called, as becomes “ children of light—Being holy in all manner of con- “ versation—putting on the Lord Jesus Christ; ex- “ ercising ourselves unto godliness—Walking up-“ rightly, according to the truth of the Gospel, dili“ gently following every good work—Shewing, out “ of a good conversation, our works, with meekness
 “ and wisdom—That we may adorn the doctrine of “ God our Saviour in all things—Considering that “ we are created in Christ Jesus unto good works,

“ Phil. iii. 9. 2 Cor. v. 15. Phil. i. 27. 1 Cor. vi. 20.
 “ James, ii. 20. 2 Cor. ix. 13. Eph. iv. 2. Ib. v. 8.
 “ Rom. xiii. 14. 1 Tim. iv. 7. Gal. ii. 14. 1 Tim. v. 10.
 “ James, iii. 13. Tit. ii. 10.

“ that we should walk in them—Having our conver- “ sation in Heaven; walking worthy of the Lord, “ unto all pleasing, being fruitful in all good works.
 “ That every one of us who professeth the name of “ Christ may depart from iniquity—Because for “ this reason was the Gospel preached to those that “ are dead in sin, that they may live according to God
 “ in Spirit.

That we may give all diligence, to add to our “ faith, virtue; and to virtue, knowledge; and
 “ to knowledge, temperance; and to temperance, “ patience; and to patience, godliness; and to “ godliness, brotherly kindness; and to brotherly “ kindness, charity; that these things being in “ us, and abounding, we may not be barren or “ unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus “ Christ, but may hereby clear up unto ourselves
 “ the evidences of our calling and election.

“ That we may deny all ungodliness and worldly “ lusts, living soberly, righteously, and godly, in this “ present world, looking for that blessed hope, and
 “ that glorious appearing of the great God, and our “ Saviour Jesus Christ, who gave himself for us,
 “ that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and “ purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of “ good works—considering that he shall be revealed
 “ from Heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming “ fire, to take vengeance on those who obey not his “ Gospel, who shall be punished with everlasting de- “ struction, from the presence of the Lord, and from “ the glory of his power, when he shall come to be “ glorified in his saints, and to be admired of all them
 “ that believe in that day—For if he that despised “ Moses’s law, died without mercy, under two or

“ Eph. ii. 10. Phil. iii. 20. Gal. i. 10. 2 Tim. xii. 19.
 “ 1 Pet. iv. 8. 2 Pet. i. 5—8. Tit. ii. 12, 13. 2 Thess.
 “ i. 7.

“ three

“ three witnesses, of how much sorer punishment shall
 “ he be thought worthy, who hath trodden under foot
 “ the son of God, and hath counted the blood of the “ covenant an unholy thing; and hath done despite
 “ to the Spirit of grace. That the God of all grace,
 “ who hath called us into his eternal glory by Christ
 “ Jesus, would make us perfect, establish, strengthen,
 “ settle us—That we may continue in the faith, “ grounded and settled, and not be moved away from
 “ the hope of the Gospel, being rooted and built up,
 “ and established in the faith—Laying aside every “ weight, and the sin that does so easily beset us: and “ running, with patience, the race that is set before “ us—Holding fast our profession, without wavering;
 “ that we may abide in Christ, and his words may “ abide in us—Continuing in the things which we “ have learned—Being faithful unto the death, that “ he may bestow upon us a crown of life.

“ That the word of Christ may dwell in us richly,
 “ in all wisdom—that we may grow in grace, and “ in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus “ Christ—Being filled with the fruits of righteousness, “ which are by Jesus Christ; unto the glory and “ praise of God—That we may be strong in the “ grace that is in Christ Jesus.

“ That having fought a good fight, and finished “ our course, and kept the faith, we may receive the “ crown of righteousness, which, at the last day, the “ Lord, the righteous Judge, will bestow upon all “ those that love his appearing—That he would “ carry us, through faith, unto salvation.

“ And because, when we have reckoned all the “ duties we can, we shall leave out many parti“ culars, therefore, for the supply of those which “ Heb. x. 28. 1 Pet. v. 10. Col. i. 23. Ib. ii. 7.

 “ Heb. xii. 1, 2. Heb. x. 23. John, xv. 7. 2 Tim. iii. 14.
 “ Rev. ii. 10. Col. iii. 16. 2 Pet. iii. 18. Phil. i. 11.
 “ 2 Tim. iv. 7, 8.

“ we

“ we cannot specify, we may use some general “ form answerable to that exhortation of the “ apostle—That whatsoever things are true,
 “ whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things
 “ are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever “ things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good “ report, if there be any virtue, and if there be any “ praise, that we may think of and do these things.

“ Being blameless and harmless, the sons of God, “ without rebuke, in the midst of a crooked and per“ verse generation, among whom we may shine as “ lights in the world.”

No. III.

ΩΔΑΙ ΠΝΕΥΜΑΤΙΚΑΙ.—Songs dictated or inspired by the Holy Spirit. EPH. v. 19.

THE neglect of PSALMODY, in the congregations at large, has contributed very much to damp the ardour of devotion, and, consequently, to cause an indifference to the Christian religion. Less of instrumental, and more of vocal music, (in which all the people should unite with heart and voice,) would conduce greatly to the revival of decayed piety. It would render our religious assemblies interesting, where they are now cold; and merely formal.

Psalmody, it is well known, is confined, in the greater part of country churches, to a few, and is become a matter of mere amusement, both to the hearers and performers. To many, it is tedious and disgusting.

“ Phil. iv. 8. 1b. ii. 15.

The whole congregation, women and children, as well as men, should sing simple tunes, such as are easily learned, and, at the same time, deeply affect the heart, while they please the ear. The instrument should not be so loud as to drown the voices. An organ, under the hands of an ambitious player, usually overcomes the melody of the voice, and grates discord on the ear of piety.

When all join, to the best of their power, in singing well-composed hymns, all must be affected; and psalmody will, like prayer, become a powerful means of grace. As it is now conducted, religion seems to have little or no concern with it. Some of the congregation sit with indifference or impatience; others divert themselves, as well as they can, with observing the grimaces of the singers; while one or two, amateurs and practitioners of music, lend an ear, as critics on the skill of the performers.

The soft and sweet melody, in some of the places of religious worship frequented by various dissenting congregations in London, is delightful to an uncorrupted ear, while it warms the heart with devotion, meliorates the disposition, and leaves the mind full of pious sentiments to God, and charitable affections to man. As far as I am able to judge, psalmody, in the church of England, requires a complete and immediate reformation.

The apostle says, "Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly, in all wisdom, teaching and admonishing one another in psalms, and hymns, and spiritual songs, singing with GRACE in your hearts to the Lord *."

Is this addressed only to ten or twelve persons in every congregation? Certainly it is addressed to all Christians; and there is no doubt but that

* Col. iii. 16.

Christianity would flourish more, if due attention were paid to psalmody. Many who are separated from the established church, are influenced, in their separation, by the efficacious method of deriving grace into their hearts, which they experience in their own assemblies, by the pleasing, melting strains of holy harmony.

No. IV.

THE following is a short list of books, recommended to the choice of persons who are not professional students in divinity, but who, occupied in worldly business, read, in the intervals, for the sake of improvement in piety and morality. It is not expected that such persons should procure all which are here mentioned, but select those which they may best approve, or most conveniently obtain. Doubtless there are many more which might be recommended; but, considering for whom the books are designed, I am unwilling to enlarge the collection beyond reasonable limits. I have arranged them alphabetically.

Barrow's Works.

Baxter's Works.

Beveridge's Private Thoughts.

Butler's Analogy.

Collyer's Sacred Interpreter.

Derham's Physico-Theology.

Doddridge's Rise and Progress.

———— Family Expositor.

———— Lectures.

Earle on the Sacrament.

Edwards's (John, of Cambridge) Works.

Gastrell's Institutes.

Gastrell's

Gastrell's Certainty and Necessity of Religion in general

-
- Certainty of the Christian Revelation.
Gibson's Family Devotions.
Gray's Key to the Old Testament.
Hale's Contemplations.
Hammond's Practical Catechism.
Horne's Commentary on the Psalms.
Kenn's Manual for Winchester Scholars.
Kettlewell's Works.
Lowth's Directions for reading the Scriptures.
Lucas's Enquiry after Happiness.
Nelson's Works.
Norris's Works.
Ostervald's Corruptions of Christianity.
Owen's (Dr. John) Works.
Patrick's Works.
Pelling's Works.
Scott's Christian Life.
Smith's (John) Select Discourses.
Spinckes's Devotions.
Stanhope's Thomas a Kempis.
Talbot's (Mrs.) Devotional Pieces.
Taylor's (Bishop) Works.
Trapp's Discourses on the Gospel.
Watts's Works.
Wilfon's (Bishop) Works.
Waterland's Works—if any choose to enter into learned disquisitions on points of controverted doctrine.
-

No. V.

I do not advise the true Christian to enlist himself under any of the celebrated SYSTEM-MAKERS. Such attachments only tend to make parties in religion, and to destroy charity. The church of England

England is said to be Calvinistical in its Articles, while the majority of its ministers are Arminians.

Dr. Morley, afterwards Bishop of Winchester, being asked what the Arminians held, pleasantly answered—that they held—all the best bishoprics and deaneries in England.

The true follower of Jesus Christ will seek no other appellation than that of Christian. He will select the true doctrine, wherever he can find it, but be bigotted to no NAME under Heaven.

“Doctrina Christi,” says Erasmus, “quæ prius nesciebat AOTOMAXIAN, capit a philosophiæ studiis pendere : hic erat primus gradus ecclesiæ ad deteriora prolabantis.”—The doctrine of Christ, which at first knew nothing of verbal disputes, began to depend on philosophical studies; this was the first step which the church made in its progressive descent to a state of degeneracy.

On observing the various, and even contradictory tenets of the system-writers and their followers, one is tempted to exclaim with the poet, “*O Cecita de la terrene menti !

In qual profonda notte,
In qual fosca caligine d'errore
Son le nustr' alme immerse
Quando tu non le illustri, O SOMMO SOLE !
A che del saper vostro
Insuperbite, O MISERI MORTALI ?
Questa parte di noi, che 'ntende, e vede,
Non è nostra virtù, ma vien dal CIELO.*”

O blindness of our earth-incrusted minds !
In what a midnight shade, what sombrous clouds
Of error are our souls immersed, when thou,
O Sun supreme ! no longer deign'st to shine.

Why of the little knowledge ye attain
Vaunt ye yourselves, poor mortals as ye are,
For that within us which thus thinks and sees,
Not to ourselves we owe : it comes from Heaven.

PASTOR FIDO, ACT v. Sc. 6.

THE END.

